Mr. L. W. Emerick, at a special meeting of the Common Council, asked for a franchise similar to that submitted by the Bell Company. The Council referred the matter to the Board of Public Works, directing the board to fix the lowest price at which the franchise could be sold and the same would be sold at public auction to the highest bidder.

The board took no action in the matter. It appears to be the opinion of the members that all of the telephone companies should string their wires in one conduit, thereby saving the trouble and inconvenience of tearing up the streets when the other companies desire to place their wires under ground.

BASEBALL ASSOCIATION.

Report of Secretary and Treasurer Submitted—Creditable Showing.

A meeting of the Fulton Baseball Association was held on Friday evening in the City Hall. Vice-president Earl S. Brown called the meeting to order and stated its purpose. He expressed gratification over the successful effort, which had been made during the past season in furnishing good, clean sport for the people of this vicinity through the securing of a baseball franchise for Fulton; regretted that the start was made so late in the season; had it been earlier, a better financial result would have been obtained; mentioned the trials incident to the management. Mr. Brown was confident that Fulton had been thoroughly advertised through the publication, in almost every daily paper in the State outside of New York City, of the standing of the clubs of the Empire State League. This was an advantage which should not be overlooked.

Secretary Whitaker's report was called for. Mr. Whitaker emphasized all that Mr. Brown had stated in regard to the advantages accruing to Fulton through its connection with the Empire State Baseball League. He went into detail regarding the securing of the franchise and made many valuable suggestions in the matter of reorganization, if it were the pleasure of the association to continue in existance for another season. He thought the organization of a corporation would be a move in the right direction; the purchasing of a field for athletic purposes—one easy of access for the people of the east and west sides; Nelson's field on South First street might be secured; a fence and grand stand erected; start early in the season and secure a team that could win three out of five games; pay some capable man a salary as manager, and the enterprise could be made a paying venture.

Attorney Spencer suggested that the present executive committee be empowered to formulate plans for the incorporation of the association, gather important details in the matter of securing a field, and any other information which would be beneficial to the association, and report the same as soon as practicable for discussion at a public meeting. This motion prevailed.

Treasurer Maurice Conley submitted the following report, which was accepted:

Total indebtedness incurred	$1,659.51
Disbursements	1,506.44
	$153.07
Accounts receivable	35.00
Deficit	$118.07

This sum, divided pro rata among fifty-two members, means an assessment of $2.28.

The deficit, it was explained, was largely owing to the fact that the fair interfered with games which had been scheduled. It was hoped by holding a game on the Saturday following the fair that all indebtedness could be cleared up, but the continuation of the fair on that day prevented.

The Chamber of Commerce will be importuned by a committee to take an interest in the organization and to subscribe something toward the deficit.

Mr. B. W. Bennett believed it was incumbent on all of the members to render a vote of thanks to the officers and directors for the very efficient manner they had discharged the duties of their office. A resolution to this effect was adopted.

HOSPITAL AID ASSOCIATION.

Philanthropic Society Incorporated with Headquarters in This City.

Papers of incorporation have been filed, perfecting the organization of the Oswego County Hospital Association, with headquarters at No. 44 South First street. The officers and incorporators are well-known residents of Fulton. They are: Thomas Hunter, president; L. F. Joy, M. D., vice-president and medical inspector, and N. L. Whitaker, secretary and treasurer.

The object of the organization is a most humane one, being to provide medicines and medical attendance and hospital service at a nominal cost to its membership, and to take up such other benevolent work as its funds may permit.

Similar organizations in various other cities are doing a work of great good, and it is anticipated that like results will be the outcome in Fulton, and the entire county, which will be the field of the local association.

The method pursued is to submit each applicant for membership to a medical inspection, which, if successful, places the candidate in good standing with the organization immediately upon the payment of the first month's dues, no membership fee being charged. Both men and women, individually as well as entire families, will be taken into membership.

Medical attendance may be secured by the members from their own family physicians, and no charge in this respect will be occasioned any one entering the membership, except that the association will pay the bills incurred.

The membership will be divided into two classes, A and B, the first of which will carry the following dues per month:

For an individual member	.50
For a family of two	$1.00
For a family of three	1.50
For a family of four	1.75
For a family of five	2.00
For a family of six	2.25
For a family of seven	2.50
For a family of eight	2.75

Members of class B will enjoy all of the privileges of class A, and will in addition be entitled to hospital service, with nurse, room and board, the monthly dues for membership therein being slightly higher than in class A.

FIRE AND POLICE BOARD.

In View of the Men Who Are Brought Here to Work on the Canal, It is Deemed Wise to Increase the Police Force.

At a meeting of the Board of Fire and Police Commissioners, held Friday evening, Chief of Police [illegible] asked that Andrew Brannegan, who has served a probationary period of thirty days on the force, be appointed to regular duty. This was agreed to.

A matter of vital importance to the city's well being was discussed by the commissioners by Chief Snow. It will be necessary, should [illegible] barge canal begin either this year, to increase the police force owing to the fact that a number of men will be brought to the city by contractors and it is presumed that they will not all be law-abiding. The present police force is inadequate for such an emergency, and as the forthcoming session will be the only opportunity for at least two years, that the electors will be able to vote on the proposition, deemed expedient to submit a proposition, "That the police force of the city be increased." Two more men would enable Chief Ross to insure a [illegible] safe guard against the depredations of law-breakers, and it is his judgment that now is the time to secure favorable action.

The Board appointed Walter Lee and Francis M. Dunn as paid firemen and the resignations of Daniel Griffin and Byron Cole from the Fire Department were accepted.

The Police Department payroll was ordered paid as was the payroll of the Fire Department.

Reports of the Chief of Police and the Chief of the Fire Department were received and accepted, and [illegible] placed on file.

Judge Stowell's 67th Birthday.

Judge Stowell 67th birthday occurred yesterday. The Oswego Palladium states that he is enjoying the best of health and was at his desk [illegible] a. m., as bright as a button and happy as a lark. For years he has made Oswego his home and is admired and respected by all its citizens.

Some Seasonable Advice.

It may be a piece of superfluous advice to urge people at this season of the year to lay in a supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is almost sure to be needed before winter is over, and much more prompt and satisfactory results are obtained when taken as soon as a cold is contracted and before it has become settled in the system, which can only be done by keeping the remedy at hand. This remedy is so widely known and so altogether good that no one should hesitate about buying it in preference to any other. It is for sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Could Not Be Better.

The uniform success of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera ann Diarrhoea Remedy has won for it a wide reputation and many people throughout the country will agree with Mr. Charles W. Mattison, of Milford, Va., who says: "It works like magic, and is the best preparation I know of. It couldn't be any better." He had a serious attack of dysentery and was advised to try a bottle of this remedy, which he did, with the result that immediate relief was obtained. For sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

The Mosquito Plant.

In northern Nigeria there is a tree, called in scientific language Ocimum viride, which mosquitoes cannot tolerate. Two or three plants kept in every room and placed along the veranda are enough to shut out trespassing insects. A mosquito gently inclosed in a leaf of the plant will lose consciousness in a few seconds. The bruised leaf has a scent not unlike that of wild thyme and eucalyptus. The natives of northern Nigeria prefer an infusion of its leaves to quinine in malarial fever both for themselves and their children.

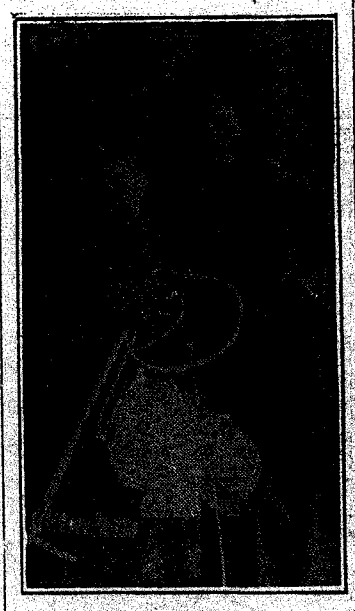
Joe Ramsey of The Wabash

The Railroad President Who Is Fighting the Goulds—"Trying to Get Home."

George Gould's Career in the Railway World.



JOSEPH RAMSEY, JR.

THE decidedly vigorous and rather acrimonious railroad war which is being waged by Joseph Ramsey, Jr., president of the Wabash system, against the Gould interests in that property, represented by George Jay Gould, will be brought to a climax at the annual meeting of the stockholders to be held Oct. 10. For some time it had been current in railroad circles that the relations between the Goulds and the president of the Wabash had become strained. Ever since the opening of the Wabash extension into Pittsburg, which was due largely to Mr. Ramsey's personal effort, the Goulds have been critical of his management. Mr. Ramsey retaliated by turning over certain railroad properties acquired by him personally, but presumably in the interest of the Wabash, to opposing lines.

One of these small roads, the Little Kanawha, was greatly coveted by the Goulds in their scheme of extending the Wabash to the Atlantic seaboard. Finally Mr. Ramsey sent in his resignation and followed it with an appeal to the stockholders for proxies sufficient to put the Wabash under new control and incidentally vindicate him.

Joseph Ramsey, Jr., has been connected with the Wabash for about ten years and has been its president since 1901. Under his management it has developed greatly and has advanced to a foremost position among the railroads of the middle west. Few of his age—he is now fifty-five—can look back over a busier career. He is a native of Pittsburg, of Scotch-Irish extraction, and during his determined fight to extend the Wabash to that city he was accustomed to declare jocularly that he was "trying to get home." He was graduated from the Western Pennsylvania university at the age of nineteen and went immediately to the engineering department of the Pittsburg, Cincinnati and St. Louis railroad and from the first day began to make a good record. As a reliable builder of new roads he gained much reputation and received many flattering offers. For upward of twenty years he served as chief engineer and superintendent on various roads.

In 1890 Mr. Ramsey attracted the attention of President M. E. Ingalls of the Big Four, who persuaded him to act as his assistant. While engaged in that capacity he was elected to the presidency and vice presidency of several other roads and in 1893 was made general manager of the Terminal Railroad association at St. Louis, where he still resides. Two years later he was elected vice president and general manager of the Wabash system. In 1901 he succeeded O. D. Ashley as president.

George Jay Gould, spokesman for the opposing interests, is the eldest son of the founder of the Wabash system, and during his administration of the combined Gould properties he has shown himself capable of safeguarding the interests of that vast estate. From his boyhood he has made it his life object to become familiar with the detail of the great railroad principality accumulated by his energetic father. Jay Gould had him prepared carefully for matriculation at Columbia, but the young man declared his preference for a business career, and the astute manipulator did not combat his resolution. Under his father's careful supervision his eldest son was initiated into every feature of the business game as it was then played, and there is no evidence that George has failed to keep up to date. He has managed to keep control of the Wabash in spite of hostile interests. It is asserted by those who are willing to see him overthrown that the Goulds are in a minority in the Wabash—that they own only 40 per cent of the stock. If this be the [illegible] apparently for the [illegible] of George Jay Gould,

OYAMA AT HOME.

Japan's Military Genius and His Clever, Fascinating Wife.

Having whipped the Russians because of the illustrious virtue of his emperor, Field Marshal Oyama, Japan's greatest military genius, is putting the finishing touches on his campaign in Manchuria and is about to return home. Great as he is in war, Oyama loves peace, and no man in the Japanese army is more pleased because peace has come than he. Like many other eminent Japanese, he is said to be somewhat disgruntled over the terms, but, unlike Field Marshal Yamagata, he has always been docile and tractable in governmental matters, and he will doubtless accept the situation with good nature. The field marshal is a very amiable old gentleman, generous and liberal, fond of animals and intensely interested in the welfare of his soldiers. During the Chinese war he not only captured Port Arthur and Weihaiwei, but he bought provisions for his men and horses with his own money rather than plunder the wretched homes of the Chinese. He has often declared that he has no liking for war and that the irony of fate, not personal inclination, has made him a soldier.

FIELD MARSHAL AND MARCHIONESS OYAMA.

His wife, Stematz Oyama, is a graduate of Vassar and a very capable woman. During the war she has been as busy as her distinguished husband, for she has not only managed his extensive establishment in Tokyo, but has taken lessons in nursing sick soldiers, made bandages, cared for widows and orphans and been an active manager in all Red Cross work. When the late Colonel John A. Cockerill visited Tokyo after the Chino-Japanese war he declared that Marchioness Oyama spoke the sweetest English he had listened to in Japan.

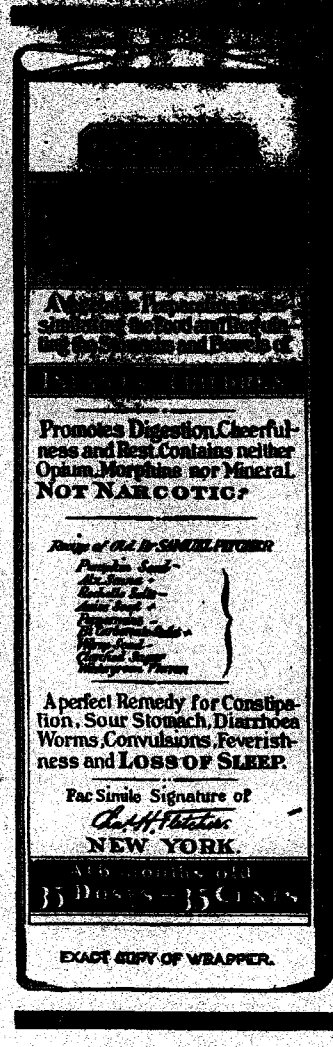
The Bow and Arrow.

The first mention of the bow and arrow is found in the Book of Genesis, where it is written that Ishmael, the son of Abraham, "dwelt in the wilderness and became an archer." "A bow shot," too, is mentioned as a measure of distance. In the sculptured slates found at Khorsabad and Nineveh representations of archers frequently occur, and the bow seems to have been a weapon in the Assyrian and Persian armies.

A Hair Cut That Made War.

The cropping of the flowing locks and beard of Louis VII. of France brought on three centuries of bloodshed. The archbishop of Rome had decreed that the French king, as a penance, should shave and have his hair cut short. His appearance so startled and amused his spouse, Queen Eleanor, that she laughed aloud and began contemptuously to flirt with the Count of Anjou, afterward Henry II. of England. The shorn king stood the disgrace for a time, but at last sent evidence of his grievance to the pope and obtained a divorce. Eleanor then married Henry, and as her dower the rich provinces of Poitou and Guienne passed into his hands. Louis made hot attacks on Normandy, and devastating wars, which continued for some 300 years, were the consequence of this cropping of a monarch's head.

A Dead Beast of Vast Magnitude.



Olaus Magnus, bishop of Upsala, tells how a certain noble Englishman saw on Aug. 27, 1532, "a dead beast of vast magnitude" which had been cast up on the shore at Teignmouth. It was ninety feet long and twenty-five feet in thickness, and evidently a whale from the mention of its blowholes, and the fact that instead of teeth "there grew to his palate above 1,000 plates of horn, hairy on one side." The noble Englishman noted that it had "three bellies like vast caves and thirty throats, whereof five were very great." On Aug. 28, 1736, an Englishman with business instincts saw two flights of birds collide with such force near Preston that 180 of them fell to earth. He picked them up and sold them in Preston market forthwith.

Royal Women Gamblers.

Marie Antoinette was a slave to cards. On one occasion she played for thirty-six hours at a sitting, with but an intermission of a couple of hours.

"The play at the queen's table at Fontainebleu," wrote the Emperor Joseph II., "was like that in a common gambling house—people of all kinds were there and mingled without decorum. Great scandal was caused by the fact that several of the ladies cheated."

Anne Boleyn, Henry VIII.'s ill fated queen, was never quite so happy as when playing for high stakes. The records of privy purse expenses are [illegible] her winnings from her royal [illegible], for she was a lucky player.—London Journal.

Hugo as an Englishman.

A woman who was called upon to write a paper at a suburban current topic club on Victor Hugo went to the Carnegie library erected there and collated her facts from a number of encyclopedias. When she had finished, having a quarter inch of space at the end of her paper, she thought she would add something original and wrote, "Whatever we and succeeding generations may think of Victor Hugo, we must agree on one thing—that he wrote good English."

Words That Have No Rhyme.

There are about sixty words in English that have no rhyme. As given in "The Rhymers' Lexicon," by Andrew Lang, they are as follows: Aitch, alb, amongst, avenge, bilge, bourn, breadth, brusque, bulb, coif, conch, culm, cusp, depth, doth, eighth, fifth, film, forge, forth, fogue, gulf, hemp, lounge, mauve, month, morgue, mourned, mouth, ninth, oblige, of, pearl, pint, porch, pork, poulp, prestige, puse, recumb, sauce, scarce, scarf, sixth, spoilt, swoln, sylph, tenth, tenth, twelfth, unplagued, volt, warmth, wasp, whatever, width, with, wolf, wolves. A critic adds that it is not clear why Mr. Lang permit "month" in this list. It seems to rhyme with "month."

AMENDMENT NUMBER ONE.

Concurrent Resolution of the Senate and Assembly, proposing an amendment to section ten of article eight of the constitution, relating to the limitation of indebtedness of counties, cities, towns and villages by excepting the city of New York from the provisions of said section after the first day of January, nineteen hundred and four.

Whereas, The legislature at its regular session in nineteen hundred and one duly adopted a resolution providing for an amendment to the constitution relating to the limitation of indebtedness of counties, cities, towns and villages, by excepting the city of New York from the provisions of said section after the first day of January, nineteen hundred and four; and Whereas, Such resolution has been duly published in accordance with law and the constitution and referred to, this legislature for action; therefore: Section 1. Resolved (if the assembly concur), That section ten of article eight of the constitution be amended to read as follows: Article VIII. § 10. No county, city, town or village shall hereafter give any money or property, or loan its money or credit to or in aid of any individual, association or corporation, or become directly or indirectly the owner of stock in, or bonds of, any association or corporation; nor shall any such county, city, town or village be allowed to incur any indebtedness except for county, city or town or village purposes. This section shall not prevent such county, city, town or village from making such provision for the aid or support of its poor as may be authorized by law. No county or city shall be allowed to become indebted for any purpose or in any manner to an amount which, including existing indebtedness, shall exceed ten per centum of the assessed valuation of the real estate of such county or city subject to taxation, as it appeared by the assessment rolls of said county or city on the last assessment for state or county taxes prior to the incurring of such indebtedness; and all indebtedness in excess of such limitation, except such as now may exist, shall be absolutely void, except as herein otherwise provided. No county or city whose present indebtedness exceeds ten per centum of the assessed valuation of its real estate subject to taxation, shall be allowed to become indebted in any further amount until such indebtedness shall be reduced within such limit. This section shall not be construed to prevent the issuing of certificates of indebtedness or revenue bonds issued in anticipation of the collection of taxes for amounts actually contained, or to be contained, in the taxes for the year when such certificates or revenue bonds are issued and payable out of such taxes. Nor shall this section be construed to prevent the issue of bonds to provide for the supply of water; but the term of the bonds issued to provide the supply of water shall not exceed twenty years, and a sinking fund shall be created on the issuing of the said bonds for their redemption, by raising annually a sum which will produce an amount equal to the sum of the principal and interest of said bonds at their maturity. All certificates of indebtedness or revenue bonds issued in anticipation of the collection of taxes, which are not retired within five years after their date of issue, and bonds issued to provide for the supply of water, and any debt hereafter incurred by any portion or part of a city, if there shall be any such debt, shall be included in ascertaining the power of the city to become otherwise indebted; except that debts incurred by the city of New York after the first day of January, nineteen hundred and four, to provide for the supply of water shall not be so included. Whenever the boundaries of any city are the same as those of a county, or when any city shall include within its boundaries more than one county, the power of any county wholly included within such city to become indebted shall cease, but the debt of the county, heretofore existing, shall not, for the purposes of this section, be reckoned as a part of the city debt. The amount hereafter to be raised by tax for county or city purposes, in any county containing a city of over one hundred thousand inhabitants, or any such city of this state, in addition to providing for the principal and interest of existing debt, shall not in the aggregate exceed in any one year two per centum of the assessed valuation of the real and personal estate of such county or city, to be ascertained as prescribed in this section in respect to county or city debt. § 2. Resolved (if the assembly concur), that the foregoing amendment be submitted to the people for approval at the general election to be held in the year nineteen hundred and five in accordance with the provisions of the election law.

The Kuklux Klan Ritual.

That only two copies of the Kuklux Klan ritual are known to exist is the statement of Thomas Dixon in the Metropolitan. One of them, he says, is in the library of Columbia college; the other is among the archives of Tennessee. It was the composition of General George W. Gordon of Memphis, and it began thus:

"This is an institution of chivalry, humanity, mercy and patriotism, embodying in its genius and its principles all that is chivalric in conduct, noble in sentiment, generous in manhood and patriotic in purpose."

Four Spiders to the Pound.

The lizard spider (Melus mygale) is the largest species of venomous spider known. He is of a bright yellow color with three red stripes on his back and a crescent of pure black on the abdomen. Full grown specimens of the lizard spider (so called because their chief food is small lizards, frogs, etc.) measure four inches across the back and have legs ten inches long. Four full grown males collected by a British exploring expedition weighed one pound four ounces. This giant of the spider family is a native of Ceylon.

Napoleon's First Cause, Mud.

That man is made of mud by spontaneous generation under the sun's heat was the deliberate opinion of Napoleon, first of the moderns, if General Gourgaud can be believed.

Referring to ancient civilizations in the east, Napoleon one day said to Gourgaud:

"All this leads me to think that the world is not so very old, at least, as inhabited by man, and within one or two thousand years I am disposed to accept the chronology appended to the sacred writings. I think that man was formed by the heat of the sun acting upon mud. Herodotus tells us that in his time the slime of the Nile changed into rats and that they could be seen in process of formation."

Origin of Dominos.

Two monks who had been committed to a lengthy seclusion beguiled the dreary hours of their confinement with a game played by showing each other small flat stones marked with black dots. By a preconcerted arrangement the winner would inform the other player of his victory by repeating in an undertone the first line of the vesper prayer. In process of time the two monks managed to complete the set of stones and to perfect the rules of the game, so that when the term of incarceration had expired the game was so interesting that it was generally adopted by all the inmates of the monastery as a lawful pastime. It very soon spread from town to town and became popular throughout Italy, and the first line of the vespers was reduced to the single word "Domino," by which name the game has ever since been known.

Bookmakers' Chances.

Layers of odds at the race track are prone to circulate tales of their enormous losses upon certain races, but it is seldom that a loss on a run may be shown, for it has been figured by experts that a skillful layer makes a book showing a percentage of 23 in his favor, by which he is bound to retain at least one-fourth of his takings. Large losses happen occasionally when an unexpected victory pays 40 or 50 to 1, but, as a general thing, unless the bookmaker deliberately gambles with chance he "makes books" so that he will show a profit on each race. A skillful bookie can so manipulate the odds that at no point does he stand to lose on a race, and, like his brother of the gambling house, his profit lies in this percentage in his favor. Even where gambling games are run without recourse to fraud the odds in favor of the dealer are never less than 20 per cent.

AMENDMENT NUMBER SIX.

Concurrent Resolution of the Senate and Assembly, proposing an amendment to section four of article seven of the constitution in relation to the time within which debts of the state must be paid and striking from said section certain limitations.

Whereas, The legislature at its regular session in nineteen hundred and three duly adopted a resolution, proposing an amendment to section four of article seven of the constitution in relation to the time within which debts of the state must be paid and striking from said section certain limitations; and Whereas, Such resolution has been duly published in accordance with law and the constitution, and referred to this legislature for action; therefore: Section 1. Resolved (if the assembly concur), That section four of article seven of the constitution be amended to read as follows: Article VII. § 4. Except the debts specified in sections two and three of this article, no debts shall be hereafter contracted by or in behalf of this state, unless such debt shall be authorized by a law, for some single work or object, to be distinctly specified therein; and such law shall impose and provide for the collection of a direct annual tax to pay, and sufficient to pay, the interest on such debt as it falls due, and also to pay and discharge the principal of such debt within fifty years from the time of the contracting thereof. No such law shall take effect until it shall, at a general election have been submitted to the people, and have received a majority of all the votes cast for and against it at such election. On the final passage of such bill in either house of the legislature, the question shall be taken by ayes and noes, to be duly entered on the journals thereof, and shall be: "Shall this bill pass, and ought the same to receive the sanction of the people?" The legislature may at any time after the approval of such law by the people, if no debt shall have been contracted in pursuance thereof, repeal the same; and may at any time, by law, forbid the contracting of any further debt or liability under such law; but the tax imposed by such act, in proportion to the debt and liability which may have been contracted in pursuance of such law, shall remain in force and be irrepealable, and be annually collected, until the proceeds thereof shall have made the provision hereinbefore specified to pay and discharge the interest and principal of such debt and liability. The money arising from any loan or stock creating such debt or liability shall be applied to the work or object specified in the act authorizing such debt or liability, or for the payment of such debt or liability, and for no other purpose whatever. No such law shall be submitted to be voted on, within three months after its passage or at any general election when any other law, or any bill shall be submitted to be voted for or against. The legislature may provide for the issue of bonds of the state to run for a period not exceeding fifty years in lieu of bonds heretofore authorized but not issued and shall impose and provide for the collection of a direct annual tax for the payment of the same as hereinbefore required. When any sinking fund created under this section shall equal in amount the debt for which it was created, no further direct tax shall be levied on account of said sinking fund and the legislature shall reduce the tax to an amount equal to the accruing interest on such debt. § 2. Resolved (if the assembly concur), that the foregoing amendment be submitted to the people for approval at the general election to be held in the year nineteen hundred and five in accordance with the provisions of the election law.

A Bird in the Hand.

It is impossible to trace the earliest use of the proverb "A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush," which in various forms of expression is common to many countries.

In middle English we find phrases which have the same purport. Thus in Hille's "Commonplace Book" (1530) we find, "A byrde yn honde ys better than three in the wode," and in Rhode's "Babees' Book," also of early date, "A byrd in hand * * * is worth ten flye at large."

No doubt our modern version springs from these old saws, and it is possible that they may have originated in the quaint remonstrance of one Will Somers, a jester in the court of Henry VIII., to whom Lord Surrey, in gratitude for many a good turn, had given a kingfisher from his aviary. When Surrey sought to recover it, promising to replace it another day, the sapient jester is said to have declined, saying, "I prefer one bird in the hand to two in the bush!"

Whereas, The legislature at its regular session in nineteen hundred and [illegible] duly adopted a resolution, proposing an amendment to section [illegible] of article six of the constitution, relating to justices of the appellate divisions [illegible] private court; and Whereas, Such resolution has been duly published in accordance with law and the constitution, and referred to this legislature for action; therefore: Section 1. Resolved (if the assembly concur), That section [illegible] of article six of the constitution be amended to read as follows: Article VI. § 2. The legislature shall divide the state into four judicial departments. The first department shall consist of the county of New York; the others shall be bounded by county lines, and be composed of contiguous counties as nearly as may be. Counties may be taken from one department and annexed to another department whenever the legislature may alter the judicial departments, but without increasing the number thereof. In each department four shall constitute a quorum, and the concurrence of three shall be necessary to a decision. No more than five justices shall sit in any case. Whenever the appellate division in any department shall be unable to dispose of its business within a reasonable time, a majority of the presiding justices of the several departments at a meeting called by the presiding justice of the department in arrears may transfer any pending appeals from such department to any other department for hearing and determination. No justice of the appellate division shall, while in the department to which he may be designated to perform the duties of an appellate justice, exercise any of the powers of a justice of the supreme court, other than those of a justice of appeals, and those pertaining to the appellate division, or to the hearing and decision of motions submitted by consent of counsel, but any such justice, when not actually engaged in performing the duties of such appellate justice in the department to which he is designated, may hold any term of the supreme court and exercise any of the powers of a justice of the supreme court in any county or judicial district in any other department of the state. State of New York, Office of the Secretary of State, ss.: I have compared the preceding copy of concurrent resolution, proposing an amendment to section [illegible] of article six of the Constitution, with the original concurrent resolution on file in this office, and I do hereby certify that the same is a correct transcript therefrom, and of the whole thereof. Given under my hand and the seal of office of the Secretary of State at the city of Albany, this twenty-fifth day of July, in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and five. [L. S.] JOHN F. O'BRIEN, Secretary of State.

Form For Submission of Amendment Number Seven.—Shall the proposed amendment to section two of article six of the Constitution, relating to justices of the appellate division of the supreme court, be approved?

Nightcap Privileges.

Queen Mary's kindness took a very old form in the case of the Earl of Sussex. He was a valetudinarian who had a great fear of uncovering his head lest he should take cold. Accordingly he petitioned Queen Mary for leave to wear his nightcap in her royal presence.

Her majesty, in her abundant grace, granted his petition twice over. His patent for this privilege is perhaps unique in royal annals: "Know ye that we do give our beloved and trusty cousin and counselor, Henry, earl of Sussex, Viscount Fitzwalter and lord of Egremund and Purnell, license and pardon to wear his cape or nightcap, or any two of them, at his pleasure, as well in our presence as in the presence of any other person or persons within this realm or any other place in our dominions whersoever during his life, and these our letters shall be sufficient warrant in his behalf."

Always on the Watch.

Children have ears like the very spies of nature itself—eyes that penetrate all subterfuge and pretense. It is good to set before them the loftiest ideals that have lived in human reality, but the best ideal of all has to be portrayed by parents in the realities of home life at home. When you are not watching and the children are—that is when the lessons are learned for life.

Caustic Whistler.

James MacNeill Whistler is said once to have confronted Oscar Wilde—at the height of the aesthetic movement—with Du Maurier, who was satirizing the Postlethwaites in Punch with all his might, and to have genially inquired, "Which of you two invented the other?"

Friendship of Books.

The first time I read an excellent book it is to me just as if I had gained a new friend; when I read over a book I have perused before it resembles the meeting with an old one.—Oliver Goldsmith.

SUBWAY FRANCHISE.

Common Council Referred Matters to Board of Public Works—Will Sell to Highest Bidder.

The granting of a subway franchise to the Empire Telephone Company has been under advisement for a week or two by the Board of Public Works and Common Council. At the special meeting of the Common Council, held on Friday, Mr. Louis W. Emerick of the Fulton Light, Heat and Power company presented a franchise which he wished the Council to grant. The franchise provides that Mr. Emerick or his assigns shall have the right to construct, operate and maintain a telephone system upon, over and underneath the surface of the streets of the city of Fulton.

The application stated that the city of Fulton shall have without charge for maintenance such space as may be necessary, not exceeding one duct in any locality in the underground and such space as may be necessary on the overhead construction for its police and fire telephone wires. The application also allows the city six telephones free of charge.

The application is the same as presented by the Empire Telephone company and its object is to have a franchise granted to some one in this city rather than to the Empire company. If this is done the Fulton Telephone company will afterwards acquire the franchise and will put its wires underground the same as proposed by the Empire people, but if the Empire people should get the franchise it is not likely that it would allow its rival to use the conduit.

The matter was thoroughly discussed by the Council and it was finally decided to refer it to the Board of Public Works to fix some price on the same and then to sell the franchise to the highest bidder for a sum not less than that fixed by the Board of Public Works.

The Empire people claim that it is not necessary for them to secure a franchise from the city of Fulton, that they have secured the right from the State to construct lines in any highway or street in the State and that they simply apply for the franchise so that there will be no friction.

Reason For Anxiety.

A large pawnbroker's shop was on fire, and the firemen were busy trying to prevent the conflagration spreading. Among the large crowd of onlookers was one woman who was evidently in an agony of excitement. Every now and again she would urge the firemen to more strenuous efforts, and as the flames leaped higher her grief became violent.

"What's wrong, missus?" said a sympathetic bystander. "Don't you upset yourself. There ain't no one in there. What's the row?"

"Row!" exclaimed the lady through her tears. "There ain't no row at all at present, but there will be if they don't get that fire out soon. My old man's Sunday suit is up that spout, and he don't know it!"—London Answers.

Rank Carelessness.

A New Yorker who, being rich, employs a man servant said to his valet one morning, "Hoskin!" "Sir," said the man. "You are getting careless, Hoskin." Oh, sir, I hope not, sir." "You don't brush my clothes regularly any more." "Oh, sir, I assure you"—"There, Hoskin, that will do. I left a dollar in my white vest pocket yesterday morning and—it is still there."

Human Nature.

All boys think they will be richer than their fathers, and all girls think they can keep house better than their mothers. They continue to think this until they are fathers and mothers themselves.

Competent statisticians declare that twenty-two acres of land are necessary to sustain one man on fresh meat. The same space of land, if devoted to wheat culture would feed 42 people; if to oats, 88; potatoes, Indian corn and rice, 176, and if to the plantain, or banana, over 6,000 people.

The Mission of the Children.

Only think, if there was never anything anywhere to be seen but grown-up men and women, how we would long for the sight of a little child! Every infant comes into the world like a delegated prophet, the harbinger and herald of good things, whose office is to turn the fathers' hearts to the children and to draw the disobedient to the wisdom of the just. A child softens and purifies the heart, warming it and melting it by its gentle presence; it enriches the soul by new feelings and awakens within it what is favorable to virtue; it is a beam of light, a fountain of love, a teacher whose lessons few can resist. Infants recall us from much that engenders and encourages selfishness, that freezes the affections, roughens the manners, indurates the heart. They brighten the home, deepen love, invigorate exertion, infuse courage and vivify and sustain the charities of life. It would be a terrible world, I do think, if it were not embellished by little children.—Thomas Binney.

A Full Stop.

A returned traveler who spent half of his holiday in a tour of Ireland brought back a sample of the happy-go-lucky wit of the Irish "jarvey" or driver. In a breakneck race down a hill he suddenly realized that the spirited little Irish mare was running away.

"Pull her up!" he shouted excitedly.

"Hold tight, your honor," returned the jarvey easily.

"Pull her up!" again commanded the traveler, making a grab for the reins.

"For your life don't touch the reins," the jarvey answered without tightening his grip. "Sure, they're as rotten as pears."

The traveler made ready to jump, but the jarvey laid a soothing hand on his shoulder.

"Sit easy," he said reassuringly. "I'll turn her into the river at the bridge below here. Sure, that'll stop her."

Noted Names In the News

Miss Mabelle Money—Hall Caine, Novelist—Booth Tarkington on Boomerangs—Lord Hugh Cecil.

R. Fulton Cutting.

MISS MABELLE CLARE MONEY.

MISS MABELLE CLARE MONEY, sponsor of the new battleship Mississippi, is the youngest daughter of Hernando De Soto Money, United States senator from Mississippi. She is a decidedly attractive young woman and will soon be married to Dr. William K. Whitney, a Buffalo (N. Y.) physician. Miss Mabelle has blue eyes and dark hair, possesses a charming manner and is a social favorite. When she was a baby she accompanied her parents to Hawaii, sat on the lap of King Kalakaua and was made much of by his dusky majesty. Miss Mabelle has marked musical talent and is a clever violinist. Her father is a native of Mississippi and is sixty-six years of age. He was educated for the law, is a lawyer, editor and planter and fought for several years in the Confederate army. He served seven terms in the house of representatives and has been in the senate since 1896. The Mississippi is a battleship of 13,000 tons displacement and will be a very formidable addition to the navy.

Hall Caine, whose visit to America is for the purpose of studying our captains of industry, expects to deal with the great commercial rulers of the United States in his next novel. Mr. Caine is a native of the Isle of Man and one of the world's most successful novelists and playwrights. Like Thomas Hardy, he was trained for the profession of an architect, but found literature a more alluring field. His first novel was "The Shadow of a Crime," and he is at his best in "The Deemster," "The Christian" and "The Eternal City." In early manhood Mr. Caine was a police reporter on the Liverpool Mercury. In a recent speech to the North Lancashire Press club Mr. Caine referred to a number of rather venomous stories that have been published about "my other me." He said, referring to one of the stories:

HALL CAINE.

"My other me is a shocking fool. When King Edward did us the honor to visit the Isle of Man my other me was said to have ridden in the carriage with him and to have occupied the time by pointing out to his majesty the scenes of his own stories. 'That's the place where Glory met' So-and-so.' 'That's where Pete did such and such.' The king was said to have borne with the mountebank for two mortal hours and then ordered the coachman to return to the quay, where my other me went down on his knees, expecting to hear his majesty say, 'Rise, Sir ——,' but the disgusted monarch only said, 'Get up, Mr. ——.'

"Now, one would have thought this piece of gammon could only find a place in a bad understudy to Punch, but, according to an American religious journal, it strayed into the pulpit, where a New York clergyman made it the text for a Tartuffish sermon on the vanity of human wishes, ending, 'Ah, my brethren, when we come to stand before the King of kings and think to put forward our poor rags and tatters of good deeds,' etc."

Charles R. Flint, a prominent merchant and financier of New York, returned recently from a visit to St. Petersburg, the fourth he has made during the year. His mission had something to do with the sale of submarines to the Russian admiralty and required a good deal of finesse and ability of the sort that has given Mr. Flint an international reputation. At the conclusion of his business with the minister of finance he hinted that he should like to meet the czar personally before his departure. The official promised that he would do what he could, and shortly afterward the matter was arranged, and Mr. Flint received an invitation issued by the grand master of ceremonies to visit Peterhof.

The invitation served as an open sesame everywhere and landed him in an antechamber of the palace, where he found himself in company with several others who were waiting to receive a summons to the imperial presence. When his turn came Mr. Flint was ushered into the royal library by a tall orderly in scarlet, and almost before he realized it he found himself shaking hands with the autocrat of all the Russias. The czar was very gracious and began to make conversation as soon as possible.

CHARLES R. FLINT.

"How do you do, Mr. Flint?" he asked in English which had no accent. "How long have you been in Russia?"

Almost before the American could reply Nicholas was ready with another question. In the most informal and friendly manner he ... on a variety of ... subjects to President ...

... different to realize that ... clothes with the air of a ... was discussing the topics of the day unreservedly with a plain American citizen was the head of the famous house of Romanoff. At the end of twenty minutes the czar stood up again, cautioned Mr. Flint not to forget to partake of some refreshment before leaving the palace and said as a last word:

"I hope and trust that the traditional friendship and affectionate relations existing between the United States and Russia will endure. Bon voyage, Mr. Flint!"

Eben Plympton, who has been arrested in Massachusetts on the charge of assaulting Captain George Martin with intent to kill, is an actor whose name is a familiar one on playbills. He has been on the stage for thirty-four years and was born in Boston in 1853. He graduated from the amateur to the professional stage and for some time was in the company of the late John McCullough. He played leading roles with several of the foremost actors of a past generation—Barrett, Edwin Booth and Miss Neilson. He has also appeared in the companies of Mrs. Langtry, Mrs. Fiske, Mary Anderson, Clara Morris and Eleanor Robson.

EBEN PLYMPTON.

Captain Martin was Mr. Plympton's guest at the actor's summer home at Silver Lake when the affair occurred in connection with which he was arrested. Mr. Plympton says it was "an unfortunate accident."

Booth Tarkington, the novelist, whose "The Gentleman From Indiana" and "Monsieur Beaucaire" have been so popular, is a native of Indiana and is only thirty-six years of age. His latest story, "The Conquest of Canaan," is running as a serial in a prominent magazine.

The young author has among the curios in his airy New York apartment a boomerang.

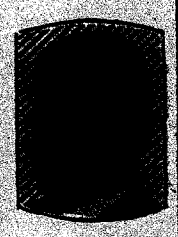
A magazine editor said of this odd weapon the other day:

"I do not believe that a native can handle a boomerang so that it will return to the precise spot it started from."

BOOTH TARKINGTON.

"I believe it," said Mr. Tarkington. "Why, a magazine writer can do the very same thing with his manuscript if he incloses a stamped envelope."

By one fortunate speech in parliament the son of the late Lord Salisbury achieved fame and became one of the leaders of the Conservative party in England. Lord Hugh Cecil is the youngest of the five sons of the late Marquis of Salisbury and first cousin of Mr. Balfour, the premier. He is very young looking and delicate, but extremely intellectual, and bears a striking resemblance to his illustrious father at his age. When he was at Oxford he never rowed or played football and was always reading papers at scientific gatherings and making speeches whenever he could find an opportunity.



LORD HUGH CECIL.

In those days he was tall and awkward and a woman hater. His appearance on the rostrum was always the signal for an outburst of merriment from the undergraduates and their female friends and relatives up from the country for the college debates, but when he began to speak silence fell upon the assembly and every one listened intently to the eloquence which issued from his rather effeminate looking mouth.

In England 1902 is spoken of to this day as Lord Cecil's year. It was the education bill of that year that brought him into such sudden and splendid prominence. The extreme high church view found in him its most impassioned defender, although his great-grandfather was a dissenting minister. It may be said of him, as was once said of Bismarck, "Beware of that man; he means what he says." One cannot listen to Lord Cecil for two minutes without realizing that he means every word he is speaking and that the most overpowering conviction is behind every word.

In the person of R. Fulton Cutting, president of the Citizens' Union, New York city has a new sort of political boss. He neither holds nor seeks office, and instead of making money out of politics he gives generously of his time and money to keep alive a movement whose sole object, it is said, is to secure an honest and fair administration of the business of the metropolis. Several years ago his followers attempted to force him to run for mayor of New York. He flatly refused to be a candidate, but ran for alderman in the "gas house" district instead, knowing well that he could not be elected there. He is a stalwart, banker, director in various great enterprises and a member of the Union league. Mr. Cutting was born in New York fifty-three years ago and is a graduate of Columbia university.

Victoria Falls, "All Aboard!"

Completion of the Bridge Overlooking the World's Greatest Cataract—Cecil Rhodes' Dream Almost a Reality.

"Darkest Africa" No Longer.

IF the late Cecil Rhodes had lived until now he might have had the spray from the marvelous Victoria falls—which are twice as high as Niagara and more than double that natural wonder in width—come in at his car window. Last year the railroad was carried north from Bulawayo to the very edge of the Victoria falls. A bridge of a single span of 500 feet, which is over the gorge below the falls, has been completed and opened recently. This bridge is the highest structure of the kind in the world, the rail level being 420 feet above the river. This is fifty-five feet higher than the dome of St. Paul's cathedral, London. While the bridge was building the rails for the extension northward were taken across the river by an aerial construction specially devised for the purpose.

Of the beauty and grandeur and fascination of the great falls of the Zambezi much has been written, but no written description can convey an accurate idea of the greatest of nature's marvels. There is only one small outlet about 100 yards in width to this awful chasm, and the mighty roar as the seething mass rushes through the opening is terrific and at first bewildering. From this basin at the foot of the fall called the Boiling Pot the contents of the Zambezi river rush with unbridled fury along a narrow and deep forge of basaltic cliffs which extend, with many windings, for forty miles.

The Victoria falls are capable of developing the greatest water power in the world, and their importance cannot be exaggerated. It has been estimated that during the season of high water at least 35,000,000 horsepower is continually going to waste. It is probable that in the near future some of this vast force will be utilized, as has been done at Niagara. It would generate electrical power sufficient to work all the industries of South and Central Africa. Before that time, however, the falls will have become one of the most frequented resorts in the world. Arrangements have been made for the erection of an immense hotel capable of accommodating several hundred visitors and replete with every modern comfort. The grounds about the falls have been laid out in parks, and every effort will be made to preserve the fine scenery.

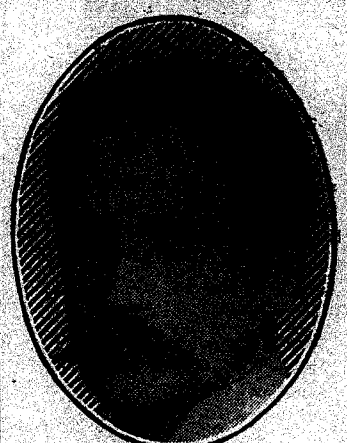
The country in the vicinity of the falls is most beautiful. Above the river is nearly two miles wide in some places, and it is dotted with islands covered with rich, tropical vegetation, including the gigantic baobab and several varieties of the palm. On one of these islands, called Livingstone island, which actually overlooks the falls, may still be seen the faint traces of the explorer's initials carved on a tree by himself. It is an ideal spot for the sportsman, all sorts of game abounding on the land and in the water. Great herds of hippopotami wallow in the shallow water, and the eland browses on the rich herbage along the shores.



There is every indication to show that there will be a great rush to this new land opened to civilization by the Cape to Cairo route. Owing to its fertility, ample rainfall, genial climate and cheap land this remote part of the British empire offers inducements to the home seeker which can be equaled by no other spot under English domination. All of the products of the temperate zone flourish, and many plants heretofore regarded as indigenous to tropical latitudes find a home there.

Time was when Cecil Rhodes was the only person on earth who looked upon the project of building a railroad lengthwise through the African continent in the light of certainty. It is exceedingly doubtful whether even he, ardent enthusiast and dreamer that he was, believed that it was so quickly ... Engineers still select in the ... Rhodesia, but ... Victoria falls, but ...

Assistant Secretary Bacon Resigns.

It is ... that Robert ... assistant secretary of ... ing previously held any ... but it is under ... that Robert Bacon has ... man of Secretary ... never been a politician in the ... acceptation of the term and knows nothing about corralling delegates or mending political fences. Mr. Bacon is pre-eminently a business man. It is said that the state department needs an overhauling so as to make its methods of doing business move up to date, and it is expected that Mr. Bacon will be able to assist in this work. It is also said that in appointing him to the post the president had in mind improvements in the consular service and believed that Mr. Bacon's knowledge of foreign trade would be useful.

One afternoon in the old Harvard university gymnasium some students were watching a boxing match. The contest was between a tall man and a short one, and the short one was getting the worst of the argument. Suddenly the larger man landed a vicious solar plexus blow on his opponent, flooring him. A cry of foul arose, but the smaller man pluckily jumped to his feet, declared it was not a foul and, facing his antagonist, remarked, "See if you can do it again."

The short man was Theodore Roosevelt. In the group was Robert Bacon, a classmate, and from that episode the intimate acquaintance of the two began. Bacon became famous as a football player and was one of the best halfbacks Harvard ever had. He was an all around athlete and after leaving college took up polo playing, yachting, golf and horseback riding, so that outdoor life has kept him young, and at forty-five he still has a splendid physique. He is six feet two inches in height, has finely molded features and curly hair and used to be known in Wall street as the "Greek god." Although a native of Boston and for some years after leaving college connected with a Boston banking firm, his financial prominence was achieved in New York, chiefly as a partner of J. Pierpont Morgan. He was associated with some of the most noted events in Wall street during the years from 1899 to 1903, in the latter year retiring from Mr. Morgan's firm several millions ahead, as generally believed.

His Harvard friends tell a story of how "Bob," as they still call him, lost a bet in the days of the roller skating craze. Young Bacon made a wager that he could go around the rink without falling down, though he had never tried roller skating before. Just as he was almost completing the course his six feet two of solid humanity went down on the floor with a bang that shook the building. He paid the wager, and his friends had a swell dinner.

COLE YOUNGER, EX-BANDIT.

Former Member of Quantrell's Band a Street Railway Promoter.

Cole Younger, who is now promoting an electric railway in Kansas, is a reformed bandit. Money for his project is being furnished by eastern capitalists, foremost of whom, it is said, is Senator Stephen B. Elkins of West Virginia. Mr. Elkins has long been a friend of Younger and his acquaintance with him began when the former outlaw saved his life. Elkins was once captured by the Quantrell band. Younger was a member of it at the time and was detailed to take Elkins to the rear and shoot him. Instead of shooting him he allowed him to escape. Senator Elkins always remembered the act and showed his gratitude years afterward by securing Younger's release on parole from the Minnesota penitentiary, after Younger had served twenty-five years.

The Dinner Party.

That the success of a dinner party does not depend on the excellence of the chef, but on the proper assortment of the company, was precisely the opinion of a very witty old lady, who wisely said, "My dear, it isn't the menu that makes a good dinner; it's the men you sit next to."

Cal-cura Solvent, Dr. Kennedy's NEW Medicine, Warmly Praised by Mrs. Chellus.

When Dr. David Kennedy said he re-named Cal-cura Solvent, his new medicine for the Kidneys, Liver and Blood, as the crowning achievement of his life, he made no mistake, as hundreds who have used it testify. Here is one letter from Mrs. A. F. Chellus of Rutland, Vt., short and to the point:

"Dear Sirs:

I have never taken any medicine that did me so much good as Dr. Kennedy's latest medicine, Cal-cura Solvent. I can work hard all day and can do more work than I could even thirty years ago. I am 58 years of age and never felt better in my life." All druggists, $1.00.

Length of Wall Paper Rolls.

"Most persons have an idea that all pieces of wall paper are necessarily of one length," remarked a wall paper man. "Sometimes when I receive orders from a distance I wonder just what the patron is figuring on. He may get enough to paper two rooms, and he may get only half enough. Some figure overeconomically and some overgenerously. Our domestic papers run eight yards to the piece. Those from France and Germany measure nine yards, while the English make their rolls so lengthy that they contain quite twelve yards. Then, of course, there's the repeat. On some of the new papers with the smallest figures this is next to nothing, and on some others, notably a long tailed bird pattern, if a bit over the figure is required for each length it means a loss of five feet on every strip put on the wall."—Philadelphia Record.

Throwing the Dart In Cork Harbor.

The ancient civic ceremony known as throwing the dart is performed every third year, and it survives only in Cork. Proceeding to the mouth of the harbor, the lord mayor casts a silver dart into the sea and as he does so proclaims his jurisdiction as admiral of the port over the harbor and all its inlets and creeks. The naval authorities look on with unconcern, the ceremony having long ago lost its ancient significance. Throwing the dart is now merely the occasion for a civic outing.—London Mail.

An Interesting Question.

"[illegible] as a 'Westminster schoolboy' by carving his name beneath the clock on the western tower of the abbey gains before the audacity of another Westminster schoolboy, who secreted himself in the abbey in fulfillment of a wager that he would sleep in the abbey, notwithstanding the report that the ghost of Bradshaw, the president of the court at the trial of Charles I., who in the time of the commonwealth occupied the deanery, haunted the building. He spent the night in the abbey and occupied his time in carving his name on the coronation chair, which bears to this day the following rudely cut inscription: "I, Peter Abbott, slept in this chair."—Dundee Advertiser.

A Fish Restaurant.

A "fish restaurant" is not one at which fish is served exclusively or even chiefly, but a restaurant at which a specialty is made of the service of fish and at which usually some special fish dish is offered to patrons each day. In London and Paris such restaurants make as their chief specialty sole, as popular in England as in France. The Paris restaurants, in addition, make a feature of crayfish, cod and mussels and the London restaurants of whitebait and shrimp. The variety of fish procurable in these two cities is almost without limitation, but a different fish each day requires, in fact, only seven varieties, in the preparation of which there are many specialties.

A Batch of Bulls.

There are several interesting bulls in the following serious paragraph from the Western News of Galway, Ireland: "To rob a man of his purse and then maltreat him for not having it would pass muster among pitiless brutal crimes, but to kill and slay a man to the point of death and then murder him for not dying quick enough is one point better in the catalogue of human infamy. It is enough to make Irishmen set their teeth and talk silently in groups."

It is curing hundreds and thousands—some had faith and some didn't. Kodol will cure you if medicine can cure you, whether you have faith in it or not. Mrs. J. P. The Recession of Niagara Falls.

Horseshoe fall has receded more than 260 feet within the memory of living men and is now traveling toward Lake Erie at the rate of fully 500 feet a century. At present the crest of this fall, as its name implies, has the general outline of a horseshoe, and its length is about 3,000 feet, but if the present rate of erosion continues the length of the crest may reach 8,000 feet or more within the next half millennium. Now the Canadian end of the Horseshoe fall is a few rods upstream from the spot whence Table rock has fallen into the gorge, but the indications are that this end of the cataract will gradually retire toward the Dufferin islands, leaving a bare cliff as the apex cuts its way upstream.—Alton D. Adams in Scientific American.

The Effect Inevitable.

"Borrowing money," remarked the man who comments on things, "is not a good plan."

"Quite true," said Senator Badger. "I've always noticed that the man who lends money will sooner or later become sensitive to the touch."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

A Judicious Inquiry.

A well known traveling man who visits the drug trade says he has often heard druggists inquire of customers who asked for a cough medicine, whether it was wanted for a child or an adult, and if for a child they almost invariably recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The reason for this is that they know there is no danger from it and that it always cures. There is not the least danger in giving it, and for coughs, colds and croup, it is unsurpassed. For sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

A Strange Recipe For Acting.

Perhaps the most striking instance of voluntary hallucination is that recorded by an intimate friend of the actor Talma. Langlois states that the great tragedian told him that whenever he entered on the stage he was accustomed by force of will to make his brilliant audience disappear and to substitute for them a house full of skeletons. The emotion which these ghastly creatures of his own imagination excited served, he declared, to give additional force to his own impersonations.

Figures Do Not Lie,

Only one dose a day of this wonderful remedy is necessary to effect a quick and permanent cure. Sold by leading druggists everywhere.

FOR BOTH

One disease of thinness in children is scrofula; in adults, consumption. Both have poor blood; both need more fat. These diseases thrive on leanness. Fat is the best means of overcoming them; cod liver oil makes the best and healthiest fat and is the easiest and most effective form of cod liver oil. Here's a natural order of things that shows why Scott's Emulsion is of so much value in all cases of scrofula and consumption. More fat, more weight, more nourishment, that's why.

A PROGRESSIVE THEOLOGIAN.

Rev. Dr. Washington Gladden, Who Discusses "Tainted Money."

The Rev. Dr. Washington Gladden, who started the now famous debate about acceptance by missionary societies of so called "tainted money," was one of the earliest to take up the study of the problem of trusts. He is what is called an "advanced thinker" on both religious and economic questions. He was one of the first to put in popular form the results of the so called "higher criticism" of the Bible and while rejecting the theory of the literal inspiration of the Scripture defends them nevertheless as containing a divine revelation to men. One of his books is entitled "Who Wrote the Bible?" and he has written and lectured much on the subject of Biblical study. His utterances on the subject of social and economic reform have attracted more attention, however, than his teaching on theological questions. He has done much to quicken the conscience of the religious world on the relation between morals and business.

REV. WASHINGTON GLADDEN, D. D.

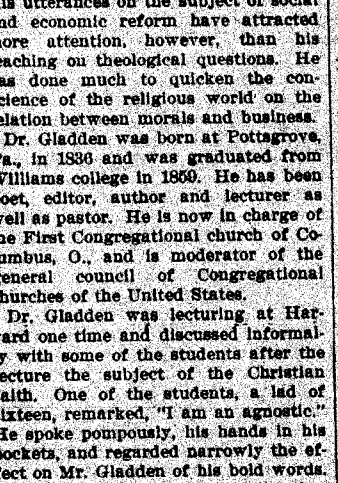
Dr. Gladden was born at Pottsgrove, Pa., in 1836 and was graduated from Williams college in 1859. He has been poet, editor, author and lecturer as well as pastor. He is now in charge of the First Congregational church of Columbus, O., and is moderator of the general council of Congregational churches of the United States.

Dr. Gladden was lecturing at Harvard one time and discussed informally with some of the students after the lecture the subject of the Christian faith. One of the students, a lad of sixteen, remarked, "I am an agnostic." He spoke pompously, his hands in his pockets, and regarded narrowly the effect on Mr. Gladden of his bold words.

"You are an agnostic?" said the clergyman.

"I am an agnostic."

"What is an agnostic?" Mr. Gladden asked. "Tell me, won't you, just what meaning you attribute to that word?"



The lad swaggered about the room. He still kept his hands in his pockets. "An agnostic," he said, frowning, "why, an agnostic is—ah—a fellow—a fellow who isn't sure of anything."

"How does it happen, then," asked the clergyman, "that you're sure you're an agnostic?"

A WOMAN WHO DOES THINGS

Miss Norma Munro, Whose New Play Will Take Off Society.

Miss Norma Leslie Munro, who has written much for periodicals and once edited a magazine called the Impressionist, is now at work under the direction of the well known playwright, David Belasco, on a play which will hold the mirror up to fashionable New York life and make some of the members of the Four Hundred see themselves as others see them. Miss Munro is well qualified to write a play about the fashionable set, for she is herself an heiress to millions, being the daughter of a wealthy publisher, the late Norman Leslie Munro.

MISS NORMA LESLIE MUNRO.

Unlike many of the daughters of the rich, she is not content to spend her life amid the frivolities of society, but is ambitious to achieve things. She stepped into her father's publishing business when he died and has been a controlling spirit in it. She studied law and took her diploma in the class with Helen Gould. She is an enthusiastic athlete and in the Impressionist advocated ardently the participation of women in outdoor exercises. Golf, tennis and horseback riding are her favorite sports, and she is also a good whip and on the water could bring either a steam or a sailing yacht into port if the captain was disabled. Besides all these accomplishments Miss Munro has what is denied many rich girls—the sure gift of beauty.

Origin of Lilac.

Both name and tree are of Persian origin, but came to us through Turkey. The name means "bluish" (see Steat) and indicates the color of the flower. The tree is said to have been brought to Vienna by Busbecq late in the sixteenth century. The first mention of the name I have seen in English is in Gerard, where it is given as "lilliach or liliach" and is said to have been applied by "the later physitians" to Syringa caerulea, or "blew pipe," by which evidently Gerard means the lilac.

"These trees," he says, "grow not wild in England, but I have seen them growing in my garden in great plenty." There are, as is well known, different varieties, some white, some different shades of purple.

The lilac, says some punster slyly,
Is named from smelling like a li-ly!
He must have thought us wondrous silly—
We know the sound of i in lily.

—Notes and Queries.

An Odd Old Custom.

Citizens of the old Devonshire town of Honiton, in England, are immune from arrest until sunset one evening, for while the horse fair is in progress the arm of the law is powerless. This is in continuation of a quaint and picturesque ceremonial which has been handed down from the time of Henry III. When the horse fair begins the town crier, in the gorgeous dress of a beadle of the last century, appears carrying a pole, at the end of which is a large gilt glove decked with flowers. Having rung his handbell three times, the crier, in his three cornered hat, announced: "Oyez, oyez, oyez! The fair is begun; the glove is up; no man can be arrested till the glove is down. God save the king." Each sentence is chorused by the children standing round and at the conclusion they scramble for nuts. The glove is taken down at sunset.

Qualities Unlike In the Sexes.

"A man is a man down to his thumbs and a woman is a woman down to her little toes," writes Dr. Havelick Ellis in his book "Men and Women." There is hardly a measurable quality of any sort which is not unlike in the two sexes. Women even button their garments on the other side from that chosen by men and choose Sunday instead of Monday as their favorite day for making way with themselves. So far as laboratory tests go Dr. Ellis says that women are unquestionably superior in general tactile sensibility and probably superior in the discrimination of tastes, with no advantage either way in the case of the other senses. Women have better memories, read more rapidly, bear pain better, recover better from wounds and serious illness, are less changed by old age and live longer.

A Shot From Behind.

One of the most interesting features of the tragedy in 1859, in which King Kamehameha IV. shot his secretary, Mr. Nelson, arises from the manner in which the monarch fired his revolver. It is said that both men were in a room alone and were drinking beer. The king walked over to a mantel above which was hung a large looking glass. He toyed with a revolver for awhile, his back to his victim, and then, taking note of Nelson's position at the opposite side of the room by means of the mirror, he pointed the revolver over his shoulder and fired, the ball striking the secretary with fatal effect.—Pacific Commercial Advertiser.

Slightly Superfluous.

The man of this story is a very light sleeper, one who is easily wakened and who is a long time getting to sleep. In a Vermont hotel he had at last got sound asleep when a loud rap, repeated, awoke him.

"What's wanted?"

"Package downstairs for you."

"Well, it can wait till morning, I suppose?"

The boy departed, and after a long time the man was sound asleep again, when there came another resounding knock at the door.

"Well, what is it now?" he inquired.

"'Tain't for you, that package!"—Boston Herald.

Who?

Who taught the raven in a drought to throw pebbles into a hollow tree where she espied water, that the water might rise so as she might come to it?

Who taught the bee to sail through such a vast sea of air and to find the way from a flower in a field to her hive?

Who taught the ant to bite every grain of corn she buried in her hill lest it should take root and grow?—Bacon.

To Keep From Growing Old.

A swindling firm once advertised that it would send for the sum of 2s. 6d. a recipe which, if followed to the letter, would keep folks from growing old. Some credulous persons answered the advertisement, remitting the required fee, and received the following reply:

"We would advise all such idiots as you to commit suicide at about the age of twenty-five."—London Tit-Bits.

Generous.

"See here," said the client, "you've charged me so much for handling this suit that I'll have to put a mortgage on my farm. Can't you help me out a little?"

"I guess I can," replied the enterprising lawyer. "Tell you what I'll do. I'll draw up the mortgage at half rates."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

A Real Good Thing.

Mrs. Newbryde—I got some hams here last month that my husband liked very much. Have you any more of the same kind? The Grocer—Yes'm; got about a dozen left from the same pig. Mrs. Newbryde—Oh, that's what gives me six of them.—Cleveland Leader.

REPUBLICAN PRIMARIES.

Republican primaries were held in the several wards of the city last evening to place in nomination aldermen and delegates to the city convention, which will be held in the City Hall tomorrow (Thursday) at 2 p. m.

There was a keen fight all along the line.

Mr. Webb's name was first mentioned for the office last Friday evening, when about 250 representative citizens assembled in the City Hall and agreed to accord him their unanimous support for the nomination.

Mr. Quirk and his friends had already perfected an organization and had been hard at work for several weeks, making a close canvass of the city, to control the political machinery and secure the nomination.

The Webb forces put up a hard fight and the result is that the delegates, as selected, are evenly divided—16 for Webb and 16 for Quirk.

The Fifth ward being the home of both candidates for the nomination, proved the storm center, and a struggle for supremacy was waged in the caucus—first for chairman—Dr. D. E. Lake leading the fight for the Webb forces and Dr. A. L. Hall for the Quirk contingent—the result was a victory for Dr. Hall by a majority of nine. The Quirk delegates were elected by a majority of nineteen.

IN FAVOR OF MR. WEBB.

Urged to Accept Republican Nomination for Mayor.

There was a meeting of about 250 Republican electors and taxpayers in the assembly room of the City Hall on Friday evening for the purpose of discussing available candidates for the office of Mayor of the City of Fulton. No name was mentioned except that of Mr. Theodore Webb, the president of the Board of Public Works. Mr. Webb has shown such eminent fitness in the discharge of his public duties, that the movement toward him was of a spontaneous nature, the taxpayers reposing full confidence in him feeling assured that he would unquestionably protect their interests.

Assemblyman T. D. Lewis called the meeting to order and nominated William Hunter for chairman; George G. Chauncey and William E. Hughes were elected secretaries.

The chairman called for expressions regarding the candidacy of Theodore Webb for the mayorality nomination.

Assemblyman Lewis stated that Mr. Webb was eminently qualified for the duties of the office and would make an ideal candidate—he was conservative and safe—and would see to it that the taxpayers received full value for every dollar expended of the city's money. He would like to know from representatives of the several wards regarding Mr. Webb's candidacy.

Mr. E. R. Redhead, president of the Chamber of Commerce, said that Mr. Webb was associated with him in the management of the Eureka Mills. Personally he would regret the sacrifice of time which would have to be made by Mr. Webb, should he be elected, in the discharge of his public duties, but he was heartily in favor of him as he considered Mr. Webb a master of detail—a thoroughly methodical business man, and the party could not select a better candidate for the position.

Mr George Chauncey endorsed Mr. Webb's candidacy, believing that he would make one of the best mayors that could possibly be selected.

Ex-Mayor Foster was equally emphatic in his endorsement of Mr. Webb, knowing him to be capable and thoroughly efficient in everything he undertook.

Mr. Milo Lewis knew Mr. Webb and would be pleased to do all in his power for his nomination and election.

Mr. F. J. Switzer stated that nothing would give him greater pleasure than to see Mr. Webb at the head of the Republican municipal ticket.

Mr. Richard Carr protested that he was not in politics, but he had served under Mr. Webb on the Board of Public Works and knew no one could be selected for the important office of Mayor of the City of Fulton who was more capable or methodical.

Statements of a similar nature were made by others present.

In order to obtain the sentiment of the meeting, Hon. T. D. Lewis asked all who were in favor of Mr. Webb's candidacy to manifest it by rising. The decision was unanimous.

On motion of Mr. W. E. Hughes the following committee of six was selected to notify Mr. Webb of the action of the meeting, Hon. T. D. Lewis, F. J. Switzer, Milo Lewis, Richard Carr, Fred Burden and W. E. Hughes.

At noon on Saturday Mr. Webb met the committee in the Citizens Club rooms, and after the usual greetings and expressions of confidence, by the members of the committee in his victory at the polls next November, Mr. Webb modestly agreed to accept the proffered honor.

JUDICIAL NOMINATION

Hon. Irving R. Devendorf of Herkimer Selected by Fifth Judicial Convention on the 146th Ballot.

The fight over the nomination for Justice of the Supreme Court in the Fifth Judicial District at Oswego last week is now a matter of history. It was the most stubborn contest ever known in this section of the State for a nomination. For four days the delegates stood with heroic fortitude for Justice M. L. Wright and P. C. J. DeAngelis of Utica—25 for each—until the 146th ballot was reached, when after repeated conferences and efforts to agree, Charles D Thomas, Robert F. Livingston, W. J. Gardinier and A. D. Richardson of the Herkimer delegation broke away and cast their votes for Irving R. Devendorf, the present County Judge of Herkimer County, and he secured the nomination. Herkimer had been steadfast in its loyalty to Justice Wright, and the four who had deserted were severely assailed for their action.

Justice Wright's supporters went down in defeat after displaying superb devotion and a loyalty that was unexampled in the history of political conventions in the support of a candidate.

The regret over the loss of the judgeship in the county was felt most keenly, but after the convention Justice Wright congratulated Mr. Devendorf at the Deep Rock Hotel. D. P. Morehouse also congratulated him cordially and assured him of his hearty support. H. R. Carrier and other Oswego delegates also greeted the winning candidate cordially.

Justice Wright has also publicly expressed his cordial thanks to the "Members of the judicial delegation of our county, viz. David P. Morehouse Esq., Hon. Morton [illegible], Hon. [illegible] Fitzsimmons, Hon. [illegible], Henry R. Carrier Esq., Hon. S. B. Mead, Rocco Sargent and Edwin J. Mizen Esq., and also to Col. John T. Mott State Committeeman for our congressional district, Congressman Charles L. Knapp, John B. Alexander Esq., Editor of the Oswego Times, J. H. Cooper Esq., Chairman of our County Committee, and the other officers of our county and town organizations and to the members of the judicial delegations from the counties of Jefferson and Lewis, and Charles J. Palmer of the Herkimer delegation, and also to all my friends generally, for their earnest and loyal support of my candidacy for a renomination. Their untiring devotion to my cause and forceful labor in my behalf will ever be remembered with pride by a heart overflowing with gratitude."

After the convention, Attorney Edwin J. Mizen of Oswego, in an alleged interview in an out-of-town paper, charged Judge Merrick Stowell and the Republican county organization, with Justice Wright's defeat. It will be seen from the foregoing statement that Justice Wright does not harbor any such suspicion.

Judge Stowell has issued the following denial of Mr. Mizen's charge:

"The charge of treachery to Justice Wright made against me by Mr. Mizen in the Oswego Palladium, is hardly worth noticing. The letter printed in the Oswego Times by Justice Wright would seem to be a sufficient refutation of the charge. I will say, however, that Mr. Mizen's statement that I advised the Herkimer county delegates to abandon Justice Wright is unqualifiedly false and Mr. Mizen knows it to be so when he makes it. The people of the city of Oswego know Mr. Mizen's reputation and they know mine and I am perfectly willing to leave it to them to say whether or not I would be likely to betray the trust conferred upon me by Justice Wright. The statement of Mr. Mizen is in keeping with his feeling toward me for the last three years. He is a Republican only when it suits his convenience to be such. He is a political disturber and agitator. He was one of the active participants in the bolt for Judge Rogers three years ago; he worked and voted against the county ticket or part of it two years ago and also one year ago. His egotism is great and he seizes every opportunity to get himself into print. He is now simply desirous of making himself notorious.

While Justice Wright is disappointed over the result of the convention, he will not enter into any movement to become a candidate on an independent ticket. When the question was put to him he said: "Why, I never intimated such a thing."

...TO SAVE DOCTOR BILLS.

...Give Free Advice by Which Parents May Profit.

...an association of gentlemen, professionally physicians and chemists, ...of whom were born in the drug ...so to speak, and who have been connected with it all their lives, who ...first gave to the world Castoria, which as every one knows is a pleasant and ...effective remedy for the ailments of infants and children. It has always been recognized as a meritorious preparation, and its reward has been the greatest popularity ever enjoyed by any remedy ever put upon the market; attained, not by flamboyant advertising or appeals to ignorance or vulgar prejudice, but by inherent merit. All physicians recommend it, and many, very many, prescribe it.

Many parents call in the family physician. Many other parents take advantage of what the physician told them when he was first called in consultation. All good family physicians say: "Give the children Castoria." Healthy parents know this remedy of old, for they took it themselves as children. It was more than thirty years ago that Castoria made a place for itself in the household. It bore the signature of Charles H. Fletcher then, as it does to day. The signature is its guarantee, which is accepted in thousands of homes where there are children. Much is printed now a days about big families. Dr. William I. McCann, of Omaha, Neb., is the father of one of these much-read-about families. Here is what he says:

"As the father of thirteen children I certainly know something about your great medicine, and aside from my own family experience I have, in my years of practice, found Castoria a popular and efficient remedy in almost every home."

Charles H. Fletcher has received hundreds of letters from prominent physicians who have the same esteem for Castoria that Dr. McCann has. Not only do these physicians say they use Castoria in their own families, but they prescribe it for their patients. First of all it is a vegetable preparation which assimilates the food and regulates the stomach and bowels. After eating comes sleeping, and Castoria looks out for that too. It allays feverishness and prevents loss of sleep, and this absolutely without the use of opium, morphine or other baneful narcotic.

Medical journals are reluctant to discuss proprietary medicines. Hall's Journal of Health, however, says: "Our duty is to expose danger and record the means for advancing health. The day for poisoning innocent children through greed or ignorance ought to end. To our knowledge Castoria is a remedy which produces composure and health by regulating the system, not by stupefying it, and our readers are entitled to the information."

Democratic Judicial Convention.

Giles S. Piper, Esq., of this city was nominated for Justice of the Supreme Court, Fifth District, at Syracuse last Friday night. The convention was deadlocked from 8 p. m. until midnight. The three candidates voted for were Mayor Talcott of Utica, George W. Driscoll, Syracuse, and Giles S. Piper of Fulton. It seems that the object in deadlocking the convention was to await the result of the Republican Convention which was then in session in Oswego.

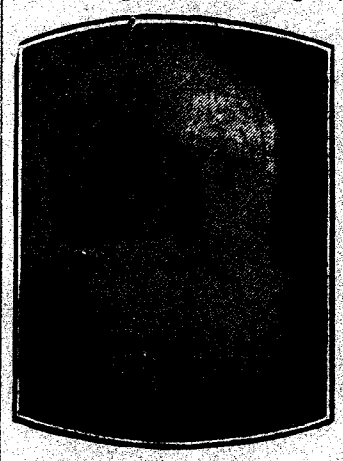
Could Not Be Better.

The uniform success of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has won for it a wide reputation and many people throughout the country will agree with Mr. Charles W. Mattison, of Milford, Va., who says: "It works like magic, and is the best preparation I know of. It couldn't be any better." He had a serious attack of dysentery and was advised to try a bottle of this remedy, which he did, with the result that immediate relief was obtained. For sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Surrogates Court.

The petition for the probate of the will of the late John C. Burns, of Fulton, who died intestate June 6th last, was filed in the Surrogate's Court Saturday morning by Attorney Arvin Rice. Bernard Burns is named as administrator. The deceased left $1,500 real property and $400 personal.

Some Seasonable Advice.



It may be a piece of superfluous advice to urge people at this season of the year to lay in a supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is almost sure to be needed before winter is over, and much more prompt and satisfactory results are obtained when taken as soon as a cold is contracted and before it has become settled in the system, which can only be done by keeping the remedy at hand. This remedy is so widely known and so altogether good that no one should hesitate about buying it in preference to any other. It is for sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

MAX SIMON NORDAU.

The Author of "Degeneration" Was a Precocious Youth.

Max Simon Nordau thinks the opening of the Panama canal under American ownership will mark the beginning of a new epoch. He anticipates that the Pacific ocean will become the scene of a great struggle because of the building of the canal. At first the Anglo-Saxon element, he prophesies, will seek to drive out the German and French flags floating over single points in the Pacific ocean, and then the struggle will be carried to the Asiatic coast.

Nordau is a physician by profession, and he still practices the healing art, though his literary labors are ample to fill up his time. He was a very precocious child and could read at four. As his childhood was a stern and austere one, reading was about the only amusement he enjoyed. At fourteen he had already published various poems, essays and tales. He is now fifty-six, and the list of his published works is of considerable length. It was his "Conventional Lies," published in 1883, that first made him famous. "Degeneration" saw the light in 1893.

"Next to the Americans," Nordau once said, "I think that the Swabians are the most humorous people in the world. A Swabian, if he has nothing funny to say, keeps silent. Stupidity is unknown among this race.

"One night in Swabia in my early youth I called on a Swabian maiden. She was very pretty. Perhaps I stayed longer than I should. Suddenly, at any rate, the young girl's mother called in a loud voice from upstairs:

"'Gretchen, Gretchen!'

"'Yes, mother,' Gretchen answered.

"'Gretchen, it is very cold here. Will you ask that young man to shut the front door from the outside?'"

MITCHELL AND MINERS.

The Men He Represents Believe In His Fidelity to Them.

John Mitchell, president of the United Mine Workers, who discounts the report that the coal operators of Pennsylvania will shut down the mines next April, has just completed a tour of reorganization among the miners of the anthracite region. Mr. Mitchell had the bad luck recently to lose most of his savings through the failure of a bank in Spring Valley, Ill. He has had opportunities in plenty for making money at the expense of the people represented by him, but the workingmen say he has never yielded to temptations of this kind, and they have great confidence in his honesty and fidelity to their cause. A coal operator was once quoted as saying that Mitchell had been offered time and again what would represent his salary for fifty years if he would make certain concessions as president of the United Mine Workers, but suggestions of such a nature were always indignantly spurned by him.

Though he is so alert in protecting the interests of the miners, Mr. Mitchell is on excellent terms personally with many of the coal operators, who like him as a man, however much their interests may be opposed to his. One time during the anthracite strike of 1902 he took lunch with several of the millionaires who are at the head of coal companies. He smoked with them and told his story when his turn came, and they called him John and treated him as one of themselves. He was apparently as much at his ease as they were. While the mine operators were opening champagne and cigars were going around hundreds of miners passed by the window of the cafe, but instead of resenting his presence there or imputing to him a "sell out" they waved him good luck or shouted a good natured greeting. St. Nicholas of Myra.

All that is known with any certainty of Nicholas is the bare fact that he lived in Asia Minor somewhere about the beginning of the fourth century. He was bishop of Myra, a Lycian seacoast town, venerable, of course, for his piety and benevolence, and he was revered in the east at least as early as the sixth century. In the Greek church he takes rank immediately after the five great fathers, and under the name of St. Nicholas of Myra he is esteemed as patron saint of by far the largest body of Orthodox Greeks, the Russian empire. As early as the year 560 Justinian dedicated a church in Constantinople to the renowned bishop. In the west, where for a reason he is more commonly known as St. Nicholas of Bari, he was acclimatized for good in the eleventh century. His vogue in the north began with the twelfth, but extended so rapidly that by the reformation he probably possessed in England alone more churches and chapels dedicated in his honor than any other holy personage.—Cornhill Magazine.

Don't Talk of Your Health.

If you are not well don't talk about it.

To do so only exaggerates your consciousness of physical discomfort; also it casts a shadow of gloom over other people. They grow hesitant about asking you how you feel. It gives them cold chills to be continually told that you are "not very well" or "not so well" or "about the same."

Do you know that a good deal of this is imagination? If you braced up and told people cheerily that you felt tiptop nine chances in ten you would feel tiptop pretty soon. You'd forget the ailing habit.

Don't let yourself become a slave to such a miserable little absorber of health and happiness as the perpetual habit of "not feeling well."—Boston Traveler.

The Velocity of Light.

Watch the train as it dashes past you with a speed of sixty miles per hour, and after it is lost in the distance sit down on the track and figure a little on the velocity of light. The train has passed with a mighty rush and great noise, but the silent beam of light flits past with a speed 11,179,500 times greater! The initial velocity of a ball fired from a twelve pounder is 1,765 feet per second; that of light 1,560,134 feet in the same length of time. Comparisons give us but a very poor idea of the velocity, but they enable us to partially comprehend the immensity of the universe, for we know that with all its prodigious speed it takes light four hours to flash from Neptune to our earth.

A Spool of Thread.

To make a spool of thread, says a manufacturer, is a complicated process. Only the very best cotton can be used for this purpose. The cotton is taken in the raw state and torn all to pieces by a machine called a breaker. It then goes through several other machines by which it is carefully combed and freed from impurities. A machine called a slipper takes it up and twists it out into soft white yarn. This is carefully combed again, and it is taken into another department, where several small strands of this yarn are twisted into one fine one. Three of these are twisted together, and you then have six cord thread, which, after it is bleached, is ready for the market.

Rough on the Bishop.

Bishop Blomfield discovered one day as he entered the pulpit that he had forgotten the manuscript of his sermon. It was impossible to do as the Scottish minister did in similar circumstances, send for the sermon from his home while the congregation sung Psalm 119. No, he must preach extempore, and did so, taking for his theme the existence of God. Very well satisfied he felt with his effort. As he walked home he overtook one of his congregation, whose opinion of the sermon he invited. "Well, it were a very good sermon," was the reply, "but I don't agree wi' it. I believe there is a God."

Safe With a Dead Wren.

The fishermen of the Isle of Man always feel safe from storm and disaster if they have a dead wren on board. They have a tradition that at one time an evil sea spirit always haunted the herring pack and was always attended by storms. The spirit assumed many forms. At last it took the shape of a wren and flew away. If the fishermen have a dead wren with them they are certain that all will be safe and snug.—London Fishing Gazette.

London.

London is a shop and a bank, a gambling hell and a cathedral. Its streets are paved with gold and set with thorns. It is the place for a rich man and the place for a poor man. It is all wealth and happiness. It is all poverty and distress. It is a huge paradox. Many things are possible in London that are also impossible. If it so please you and you possess the ability to do so you may live not merely a double life, but half a dozen different lives, which will never clash with one another. You may be in London at the same time a priest and a pirate. It is big enough for both of you.—J. K. M., Idler Magazine.

CONCURRENT RESOLUTIONS, 1905.

STATE OF NEW YORK, OFFICE OF THE Secretary of State, Albany, July 25, 1905.—Pursuant to the provisions of section one of article fourteen of the Constitution of the State of New York, and section seven of chapter nine hundred and nine of the Laws of eighteen hundred and ninety-six, notice is hereby given that the following proposed amendment to section ten of article eight of the Constitution of the State of New York is to be submitted to the people for approval at the next General Election in this State to be held on the seventh day of November, nineteen hundred and five, and is published once a week for three months next preceding such General Election in conformity with the aforesaid provisions. JOHN F. O'BRIEN, Secretary of State.

AMENDMENT NUMBER ONE.

Concurrent Resolution of the Senate and Assembly, proposing an amendment to section ten of article eight of the constitution, relating to the limitation of indebtedness of counties, cities, towns and villages by excepting the city of New York from the provisions of said section after the first day of January, nineteen hundred and four.

Whereas, The legislature at its regular session in nineteen hundred and one duly adopted a resolution providing for an amendment to the constitution relating to the limitation of indebtedness of counties, cities, towns and villages, by excepting the city of New York from the provisions of said section after the first day of January, nineteen hundred and four; and Whereas, Such resolution has been duly published in accordance with law and the constitution and referred to this legislature for action, therefore: Section 1. Resolved (if the assembly concur), That section ten of article eight of the constitution be amended to read as follows: Article VIII. § 10. No county, city, town or village shall hereafter give any money or property, or loan its money or credit to or in aid or any individual, association or corporation, or become directly or indirectly the owner of stock in, or bonds of, any association or corporation; nor shall any such county, city, town or village be allowed to incur any indebtedness except for county, city or town or village purposes. This section shall not prevent such county, city, town or village from making such provision for the aid or support of its poor as may be authorized by law. No county or city shall be allowed to become indebted for any purpose or in any manner to an amount which, including existing indebtedness, shall exceed ten per centum of the assessed valuation of the real estate of such county or city subject to taxation, as it appeared by the assessment rolls of said county or city on the last assessment for state or county taxes prior to the incurring of such indebtedness; and all indebtedness in excess of such limitation, except such as now may exist, shall be absolutely void, except as herein otherwise provided. No county or city whose present indebtedness exceeds ten per centum of the assessed valuation of its real estate subject to taxation, shall be allowed to become indebted in any further amount until such indebtedness shall be reduced within such limit. This section shall not be construed to prevent the issuing of certificates of indebtedness or revenue bonds issued in anticipation of the collection of taxes for amounts actually contained, or to be contained, in the taxes for the year or years when such certificates or revenue bonds are issued and payable out of such taxes. Nor shall this section be construed to prevent the issue of bonds to provide for the supply of water; but the term of the bonds issued to provide the supply of water shall not exceed twenty years, and a sinking fund shall be created on the issuing of the said bonds for their redemption, by raising annually a sum which will produce an amount equal to the sum of the principal and interest of said bonds at their maturity. All certificates of indebtedness or revenue bonds issued in anticipation of the collection of taxes, which are not retired within five years after their date of issue, and bonds issued to provide for the supply of water, and any debt hereafter incurred by any portion or part of a city, if there shall be any such debt, shall be included in ascertaining the power of the city to become otherwise indebted; except that debts incurred by the city of New York after the first day of January, nineteen hundred and four, to provide for the supply of water shall not be so included. Whenever the boundaries of any city are the same as those of a county, or when any city shall include within its boundaries more than one county, the power of any county wholly included within such city to become indebted shall cease, but the debt of the county, heretofore existing, shall not, for the purposes of this section, be reckoned as a part of the city debt. The amount hereafter to be raised by tax for county or city purposes, in any county containing a city of over one hundred thousand inhabitants, or any such city of this state, in addition to providing for the principal and interest of existing debt, shall not in the aggregate exceed in any one year two per centum of the assessed valuation of the real and personal estate of such county or city, to be ascertained as prescribed in this section in respect to county or city debt. § 2. Resolved (if the assembly concur), that the foregoing amendment be submitted to the people for approval at the general election to be held in the year nineteen hundred and five in accordance with the provisions of the election law.

Carrot Jam.

Our best carrots are sold to jam-makers. We have made from 30 shillings to 45 shillings per ton, according to season. The carrots are washed clean in the field and taken to the station in our bags. At the station we drop them into clean sugar bags. And who but ourselves knows what the bags contain? Why, if any one saw a consignment of carrots for a jam factory the firm would soon be in ill repute. It would not do. I say emphatically jam—the very best jam—can be and is made from carrots and vegetable marrows.—Letter in London Mail.

It is no wonder that stones which fall from the regions of space are fired by the impact when they strike our atmosphere. An Indignant Compliment.

On one occasion when a change in the cast had been made at the Savoy theater Sir Arthur Sullivan, who happened to be dining at the Savoy hotel, slipped away for a few minutes from the table and went into the theater to the upper circle, there to hear and judge for himself the capabilities of the new artists. As the play proceeded and a favorite score in the opera was taken the talented composer unconsciously commenced to hum the refrain as he desired it to be rendered. This considerably annoyed his next door neighbor, who abruptly remarked, "Excuse me, sir, if I mention the fact that I have paid my money to hear Sir Arthur Sullivan's charming opera as given by the company and not your confounded humming!" Sir Arthur returned to his dinner and related the incident with great gusto.

Various Kinds of Apples.

"Pineapple" and "love apple" (tomato) are instances of the manner in which the apple has been habitually taken as the typical fruit, the name of which is naturally borrowed in christening all sorts of fruit and vegetables that only remotely resemble it. Dr. Murray's dictionary gives an imposing list of them—Jew's apple, devil's apple, kangaroo apple, and so on. A writer of the seventeenth century speaks of "the fruit or apples of palm trees," and a fourteenth century man says that "all manere aples that ben closyd in an harde skynne, rynde, other shale, ben callyd Nuces" (nuts). In the year 1000, apparently, "earth apples" meant not potatoes, but cucumbers. And even Eve's "apple" is believed to have been a citron.

AMENDMENT NUMBER SIX.

Concurrent Resolution of the Senate and Assembly, proposing an amendment to section four of article seven of the constitution in relation to the time within which debts of the state must be paid and striking from said section certain limitations.

Except the debts specified in sections two and three of this article, no debts shall be hereafter contracted by or in behalf of this state, unless such debt shall be authorized by a law, for some single work or object, to be distinctly specified therein; and such law shall impose and provide for the collection of a direct annual tax to pay, and sufficient to pay, the interest on such debt as it falls due, and also to pay and discharge the principal of such debt within fifty years from the time of the contracting thereof. No such law shall take effect until it shall, at a general election have been submitted to the people, and have received a majority of all the votes cast for and against it at such election. On the final passage of such bill in either house of the legislature, the question shall be taken by ayes and noes, to be duly entered on the journals thereof, and shall be: "Shall this bill pass, and ought the same to receive the sanction of the people?" The legislature may at any time, after the approval of such law by the people, if no debt shall have been contracted in pursuance thereof, repeal the same; and may at any time, by law, forbid the contracting of any further debt or liability under such law; but the tax imposed by such act, in proportion to the debt and liability which may have been contracted in pursuance of such law, shall remain in force and be irrepealable, and be annually collected, until the proceeds thereof shall have made the provision hereinbefore specified to pay and discharge the interest and principal of such debt and liability. The money arising from any loan or stock creating such debt or liability shall be applied to the work or object specified in the act authorizing such debt or liability, or for the payment of such debt or liability, and for no other purpose whatever. No such law shall be submitted to be voted on, within three months after the passage or at any general election when any other law or any bill shall be submitted to be voted for or against. The legislature may provide for the issue of bonds of the state to run for a period not exceeding fifty years in lieu of bonds heretofore authorized but not issued and shall impose and provide for the collection of a direct annual tax for the payment of the same as hereinbefore required. When any sinking fund created under this section shall equal in amount the debt for which it was created, no further direct tax shall be levied on account of said sinking fund and the legislature shall reduce the tax to an amount equal to the accruing interest on such debt. § 2. Resolved (if the assembly concur), that the foregoing amendment be submitted to the people for approval at the general election to be held in the year nineteen hundred and five in accordance with the provisions of the election law.

Blue and Gray Tobacco Smoke.

Did you ever notice while enjoying your favorite cigar that the smoke that curls up from the burning end of the "weed" is blue, while that exhaled from the mouth is of a whitish gray? The explanation of this oddity is not far to seek. The wreath from the fiery end of the cigar is in the shape of infinitesimal dust particles, and all such particles (even the blue of the atmosphere is explained in the same way) reflect the blue color. In the case of the exhaled smoke the fine particles have united with the moisture of the breath and have thereby become several folds larger than those escaping direct from the burning tobacco. This being the case, they have become large enough to reflect the white light, which gives the exhaled smoke an entirely different color.

His Love Was His Ruin.

When Hannibal had crossed the Alps into Italy he established himself in winter quarters in one of the finest houses in Capua. While walking one day in the garden he heard a sweet voice near at hand. Struck by the charm of its tones, he sent for the singer and became so enamored of her that he at once attached her to his household and disposed of her hapless husband by beheading him. Retribution quickly followed this outrage. The balance of the winter was devoted to pleasure. Drill and discipline were neglected, and as spring came on the Carthaginian army was so demoralized that its prestige was lost, and the downfall of Hannibal followed.

Concurrent Resolution of the Senate and Assembly, proposing an amendment to section two of article six of the constitution, in relation to justices of the appellate division of the supreme court. Whereas, The legislature at its regular session in nineteen hundred and four duly adopted a resolution, proposing an amendment to section two of article six of the constitution, in relation to justices of the appellate division of the supreme court; and Whereas, Such resolution has been duly published in accordance with law and the constitution, and referred to this legislature for action; therefore: Section 1. Resolved (if the assembly concur), That section two of article six of the constitution be amended to read as follows: Article VI. § 2. The legislature shall divide the state into four judicial departments. The first department shall consist of the county of New York; the others shall be bounded by county lines, and be compact and equal in population as nearly as may be. Once every ten years the legislature may alter the judicial departments, but without increasing the number thereof. There shall be an appellate division of the supreme court, consisting of seven justices in the first department, and of five justices in each of the other departments. In each department four shall constitute a quorum, and the concurrence of three shall be necessary to a decision. No more than five justices shall sit in any case. From all the justices elected to the supreme court the governor shall designate those who shall constitute the appellate division in each department; and he shall designate the presiding justice thereof, who shall act as such during his term of office, and shall be a resident of the department. The other justices shall be designated for terms of five years or for the unexpired portions of their respective terms of office, if less than five years. A majority of the justices so designated to sit in the appellate division, in each department shall be residents of the department. He may also make temporary designations in case of the absence or inability to act of any justice in the appellate division, or in case the presiding justice of any appellate division shall certify to him that one or more additional justices are needed for the speedy disposition of the business before it, whereupon the appellate division in any department shall be unable to dispose of its business within a reasonable time, a majority of the presiding justices of the several departments at a meeting called by the presiding justice of the department in arrears may transfer any pending appeals from such department to any other department for hearing and determination. No justice of the appellate division shall, within the department to which he may be designated to perform the duties of an appellate justice, exercise any of the powers of a justice of the supreme court, other than those of a justice out of court, and those pertaining to the appellate division, or to the hearing and decision of motions submitted by consent of counsel, but any such justice, when not actually engaged in performing the duties of such appellate justice in the department to which he is designated, may hold any term of the supreme court and exercise any of the powers of a justice of the supreme court in any county or judicial district in any other department of the state. From and after the last day of December, eighteen hundred and ninety-five, the appellate division shall have the jurisdiction now exercised by the supreme court at its general terms and by the general terms of the court of common pleas for the city and county of New York, the superior court of the city of New York, the superior court of Buffalo and the city of Brooklyn, and such additional jurisdiction as may be conferred by the legislature. It shall have power to appoint and remove a reporter. An Antiphony of Love.

A poet has said that "as for Browning's love for his wife nothing more tender and chivalrous has ever been told of ideal lovers in an ideal romance. It is so beautiful a story that one often perfers it to the sweetest or loftiest poem that came from the lips of either." True, yet the lives of the two as poets make the story what it is. Their lives, indeed, were poems, as Milton said poets' lives should be, and their poetry was their life, as Mrs. Browning said should also be true of poets. The world could spare neither the lives nor the poems, and especially would it be poor without those poems in which each sang of the other. Take these together, was there ever, in all the treasury of the world's literature, so angelical an antiphony of love anthemed by the two radiant and immortal lovers themselves?—Richard Watson Gilder in Century.

Boiled Alive.

In English statutes of the sixteenth century the punishment set down for the crime of murdering by poison was boiling alive, and a girl was actually executed in that ghastly fashion. In 1538 Father Stone of Canterbury suffered the same death. A curious account is in existence which gives the amount paid "for two men who set the kettle and parboiled him" and "to the women that scoured the kettle." The sentence was not always carried out with so much ferocity, for culprits were sometimes hanged before being boiled. In one case it is recorded that a man was first hanged, then boiled and then quartered.

Wordsworth.

Wordsworth considered "The Excursion" his best and next to it "The White Doe of Rylstone." Wordsworth said that when he first thought seriously of being a poet he looked into himself to see how he was fitted for the work and seemed to find there "that first great gift, the vital soul," a statement which shows that, whatever other people may think of him, he had a passably fair opinion of himself. He frequently expressed his opinion of his own poetry and once said that he had widened the domain of the poet over a whole field deemed irreclaimable.

Re Consolation.

"It is a curious fact," said a Louisiana man, "that the Confederate congress never created a supreme court. The matter was before the Confederate congress, but no statute was ever passed authorizing such a tribunal.

"It was in a debate over this very topic in the Confederate senate that a personal encounter between Robert Toombs of Georgia and William L. Yancey of Alabama occurred. The senate was in executive session. The Georgia senator was speaking in favor of the creation of a court of last resort whose powers should in a way be limitless. Yancey looked on this idea with disfavor, and during the course of Hill's remarks he interrupted with the insulting statement that Hill had given utterance to a lie. No sooner had he used the offensive word than Hill, picking up an inkstand, hurled it with great force at his defamer. The glass struck Yancey over the eye, inflicting a severe wound, but doing him no permanent injury, although stories were long current that the blow finally caused his death."—Washington Post.

The Value of a Word.

As soon as the apartment house was ready for occupancy the janitor placed a "Rented" sign in several of the second and third story windows. When the agent saw the placards he said a good many things not exactly complimentary to the discretion of the janitor.

"What did you stick all those notices up for?" he asked.

"Because," was the reply, "the apartments are really rented. I thought it a good plan to let folks know they were going off so quickly."

"That is all right in principle," said the agent, somewhat mollified, "but you didn't go about it in the right way. That is not the proper kind of a notice. Never use the word 'rented' in a high class apartment. Always say 'leased.' It makes a better impression. 'Rented' sounds cheap. Any agent who wants his apartments to bring a big price will tell you that."—New York Press.

The Short And.

Brewer says the sign & is called "anders, ampers or amprus." It is sometimes called "short and." In olden times it was known as ampersand but that word long ago fell into disuse. It is simply a contracted and rapidly made form of the Latin et. The name ampersand is derived from "and per see and"—that is, a single symbol which in itself is and. Ampersand, meaning &, is used in chapter 21 of "Adam Bede" (1859); also in a poem in Punch of April 17, 1869. The first stanza in the poem alluded to is as follows:

Of all the types in a printer's hand
Commend me to the ampersand.
For he's the gentleman theems to me,
Of the typographical company.
Oh, my nice little ampersand,
My graceful, swanlike ampersand,
Nothing that Cadmus ever planned
Equals my elegant ampersand!

Silent Wisdom.

Keep still. When trouble is brewing, keep still. Even when slander is getting on his legs, keep still. When your feelings are hurt, keep still—till you recover from your excitement at any rate. Things look differently through an unagitated eye.

Dr. Burton relates how once in a commotion he wrote a letter and sent it and wished he had not. "In my later years," he said, "I had another commotion and wrote a long letter; but life had rubbed a little sense into me, and I kept that letter in my pocket against the day when I could look it over without agitation and without tears. I was glad I did. Less and less it seemed necessary to send it. I was not sure it would do any hurt, but in my doubtfulness I leaned to reticence, and eventually it was destroyed." Time works wonders. Wait till you can speak calmly, and then you will not need to speak, maybe.

FALL AND WINTER OPENINGS.

Superb Display of Fashionable Goods in Fulton Stores.

The weather was most propitious for the formal Fall and Winter openings in the dry goods and millinery stores last week and throngs of ladies attended during the three days and evenings which they continued.

J. C O'Brien.

The spacious store, corner Oneida and First streets, was most inviting in its decorations of Autumn leaves, and grape vines with their wealth of grapes, among which countless black birds disported. The effective decorative scheme had been charmingly carried out by Mr. W. A. Smith, the store decorator, who also designed it, and he was congratulated on all sides upon the success of his efforts. The window decorations were unique and beautiful extending a mute but irresistible invitation to all who viewed them, to enter the store, assuring the spectator of beauty within.

The dress goods department was unusually attractive with its abundance of new materials and colorings, black, green, plum, brown and blue predominating. In silks there was a fine assortment on exhibit in street shades, evening shades and black. The newest materials shown were black wool peau de soie, prunella, Henrietta, foulard, Panama, fine imported melrose, mohair, victoria cloth in all shades, just the thing for coat suits; cheviot's, rain cloth's and covert suitings, broadcloth, new Fall shades in silk and wool waistings, wool plaids.

In silks faille's in all shades, taffeta, peau de soie, all the new Fall shades in silk morie suitings, warrented taffeta's in all shades, plaid silk waistings, etc.

The dress trimmings deserve more than passing mention, so exquisite and varied was the assortment. The new Persian braids were so bewildering in their rich colorings that one marvelled at impossibility.

[illegible] were beautiful in [illegible]

More complete than ever before was the showing of gloves for all occasions and at all prices; the notions, outings, kimono cloths, muslin underwear, belts, collars, etc., while the furs and fur lined and trimmed outer garments, formed an exhibit by themselves.

Swell long coats in all fashionable colorings, weaves and cuts, won many buyers and as there were few duplicates among them, the arguments were all in their favor.

In the rug and carpet department, the display was almost metropolitan and more floor coverings changed hands during the three days than ever before at opening time. The price range and the quality range was almost incredible.

The millinery department in this store is always full of interest for the ladies, and this season was no exception. The hats as trimmed by Miss O'Hare and Miss Lubey were not only tasteful, artistic and beautiful, but wearable and moderate-priced as well and Sunday found many of them adorning the heads of fair femininity in this city. The hat shapes ranged from immense to tiny and the colors from black to white, with numberless colors and color combinations beside.

Buell's full orchestra furnished delightful music during the opening evenings.

When interviewed regarding the success of the opening, and the outlook for the Fall trade, Mr. O'Brien replied that as to the former, he was entirely satisfied and that the outlook was never better for business.

F. P. Connell & Co.

This firm never attempts a formal opening, but as is the usual custom, new goods were temptingly displayed in the several departments and a cordial welcome was extended all comers. There were many new dress goods displayed and the fur exhibit was large.

W. H. Patterson.

Plastico pillars, Autumn leaves and red and white ribbon lattice work transformed these double stores into a very pretty scene, the work having been done by Mr. Burr Sheldon, the store trimmer. A very pretty effect was achieved by a hidden electric fan which caused the bright leaves to tremble and shake as though in a Fall wind.

The season's best offerings were noted in the dress goods department in the new shades of plum, red and blue, as well as the staple colors, and the fashionable checks and plaids were shown in wool goods and silks. Silks in plain colors were also shown in pleasing variety.

In dress trimmings there was a large assortment in Persian and fancy braids, embroidered chiffons and fish scale trimmings in many shades Fancy ribbons and buttons, too, and Oriental and Japanese drapery silks, were greatly admired, as were the upholstery goods, lace curtains, etc.

The coat and suit department was well patronized, as it deserved to be; the line was full and well selected and the styles excellent.

In the millinery department deft fingers had fashioned hats both beautiful and wearable. The styles were exclusive, and the trimming was original and daring making a combination which appealed to many who inspected them, with the result that sales were numerous.

During the three opening days, the guests were entertained by a Mr. Logan of Syracuse, with vocal, piano and guitar selections, which were exceedingly enjoyable.

Mr. Patterson was delighted with the result of the opening and is sanguine regarding the business outlook for the Fall and Winter.

M. Katz & Co.

The largest department store in Oswego County had been effectively decorated by Trimmer Maurice Hillar, for the opening last week and throughout the several departments, desirable goods were in evidence. The dress goods department was replete with new fabrics in silk and wool and was very inviting. The trimming section was also exceedingly attractive.

An unusually large assortment of domestics attracted attention, as did the outings.

The china, crockery, notion, tinware, glove, hosiery, coat and suit, carpet and rug, millinery, furniture and house furnishing departments, presented new and attractive features on every side and found many admirers. Miss Louise Van Slyke is in charge of the millinery department and her many friends took occasion to call and compliment her upon the beauty and tastefulness of her hats.

Music was in attendance each evening.

M. E. Young.

This store deals exclusively in millinery and hosiery, yet not a lady went home without first visiting it; so original and attractive were the hats that ready sales were made. Mrs. Hillick is the new trimmer, and her work is highly spoken of by all who saw it. Especially did the young people admire the chic, daring hats, while the style range was sufficiently large to cater to the more sober tastes. Taken altogether, the opening was admittedly the most successful yet held.

MARRIED.

At the M. E. parsonage at Mount Pleasant occurred the marriage of Belva Lockwood to Charles B. Howard, Sunday evening, Oct. 8th. The ceremony was performed by Rev. W. H. Pullen.

DIED.

Mary, widow of the late Rufus Ouderkirk, Granby Center, died at the home of her son on Thursday. The funeral was held from the late home on Sunday afternoon.

Mary L. Pardee, widow of the late Dr. Daniel Pardee of this city, died at the home of her niece, Miss Carrie Bridge, in Elkhart, Ind. The body will be brought to Fulton on Thursday morning for interment in Mt. Adnah.

On the morning of Oct. 7, in the city hospital at Johnstown, Pa., occurred the death of Archie E. Newton, aged 21, after an illness of five weeks with typhoid fever.

He graduated with honors from the class of 1902, of Fulton High School, where he made a most brilliant record as a student, in debating, in music, and in all the activities of the school; gaining the respect and love both of pupils and teachers. Immediately after graduation, he was offered a position with the Babcock Lumber Co. of Ashtola, Pa., with which company he was employed at the time of his death, filling with great credit a position of unusual responsibility for one of his age.

The funeral services were held from the home of Dr. Haviland, on Oneida street, on Tuesday morning. The services were conducted by Rev. S. D. Robinson, assisted by Rev. John Richards. The burial took place at Lysander, the members of the class of 1902 acting as pall-bearers.

The presence of the members of his graduating class, and many friends together with the beautiful floral tributes from his class, the high school and from co-workers and friends in Ashtola and Fulton, showed the great love and respect with which he was held by all who knew him.

The sympathy of the entire community is extended to the bereaved family, in this, their sad affliction.

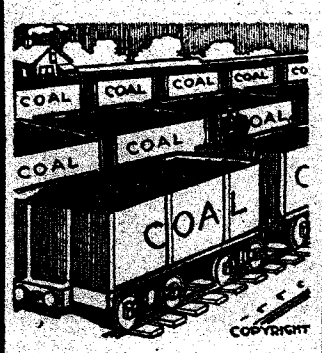
INTERESTING LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA.



A former resident writes interestingly of her present surroundings in California from:

Garfield Park, Santa Cruz, Cal., Oct. 3, 1905:—

Just think of it; here it is, time for you to gather apples, make cider, put up all kinds of goodies for the long Winter just ahead of you, I positively dread it for you. For here in lovely California we have to make no such preparations for a cold, dreary Winter.

Just now our city is doing a vast amount of street work, putting in sewer pipes, opening new streets and extending the old ones. Our new home on Garfield avenue has just been reached and is being graded and all pipes laid. Everything is lovely, though not a drop of rain since April first. I had thought I would miss the rain, but have not in the least, the ground seems no more dry and dusty than at home in the East. If we were away from the ocean it might be different, many of the streets are oiled, others sprinkled with salt water, pumped by "wave motor." There is an abundance of fruit, and for a wonder, we can equal your great growth of apples. Yesterday we drove over to Watsonville to see the loads of apples as they came into town by teams as far as the eye could reach, and waiting their turn to unload at the many packing houses. It is a sight to see them running over screens, making the different sizes, with gangs of Chinese boys ready to wrap them in paper quicker than lightning, place in boxes, stamped ready for shipment on the cars, standing at the door. A long trainload is shipped each day to New York, for steamer to London, the principle market for California apples. One-million dollars worth go out of this little valley. The ranchers contract the fruit on the trees early in the season. Then they set Italians at work, thinning the fruit to get perfect apples, who soon become experts in the business, and this fruit brings them large prices. But this is not their only crop; the leading one is marrow beans; besides they raise strawberries by the hundreds of acres. Large vineyards of grapes, and whole farms of sugar beats—near by is one of the noted Spreckles sugar factories—all this and more in a small valley. The dairy business is also carried on very extensively in close proximity. Times are good "with money to burn." This may not be true of other sections of the State. These valleys near the coast are wonderfully fertile and yield rich rewards each returning year.

Prussian Dairymaids.

In the great Elbing dairies in west Prussia the dairy maids are not permitted to wear corsets. The different grades of proficiency are indicated by the caps worn. The milkmaids wear white caps, the pupils white also, with the addition, however, of black velvet bands, and the dairy teachers caps with silver lace. Many daughters of the landed nobility take a course in this work, but all alike wear the uniform prescribed. This is not a skirt but waist and knickerbockers. It is found that this is the most cleanly and comfortable and serviceable in an occupation subject to various accidents.

Risk Versus Security.

There never was a harder master than the uncertain. "Nothing venture nothing win" is a true proverb, and sometimes it is a good guiding principle. If a single question and not a general principle were under discussion we might say that the conditions warrant a venture. As a rule we are profoundly convinced that a sure dollar is better than a possible $10; that comfort is always preferable to wealth in a lottery. The one thing to be avoided above all others is instability of income This is not to suggest that under all conditions a man should prefer the settled and sure.—Independent.

Strictly True.

"Are you sure that is an orphan asylum across the way?" asked the stranger within the gates.

"Certainly," answered the native.

"But a policeman just told me it was an old ladies' home," protested the stranger.

"Well, that's all right," rejoined the native. "Every old lady in it is an orphan."—Chicago News.

Italian Country Dance.

In Italy when the country men and women dance together the first thing they do is to toss off their shoes, if they wear any. A man does not go up to a girl and ask if she will dance, but he fixes his eye upon her from a distance and nods. She nods in return, and then both kick off their shoes, advance toward each other and begin to dance.

JAMES M'KEEN.

JAMES M'KEEN, who is associated with Charles E. Hughes as counsel for the Armstrong insurance investigating committee of the New York legislature, is a lawyer of long experience and exceptional ability. He has held many posts of trust and honor in the course of his professional career and has been identified with numerous movements having good government as their objects. Mr. McKeen was born in Brunswick, Me., in 1844 and is of Scotch-Irish descent. He was graduated with high honors in the class of '64 at Bowdoin college, of which his grandfather was the first president. He spent some years in travel, and on returning to this country took up the practice of law in New York. He resides in the borough of Brooklyn and was assistant corporation counsel of New York, in charge of the legal work of Brooklyn borough, under the administration of Mayor Low. He was an unsuccessful candidate for justice of the supreme court in 1903. Mr. McKeen is married, is prominent in numerous societies and is president of the Hamilton club, one of Brooklyn's leading social organizations. To Mr. McKeen is attributed the opinion that civil and perhaps criminal charges would lie against some of the high up life insurance officials who have testified to using trust funds for political contributions and in other questionable ways.

The Duchess of Marlborough, who is now visiting her relatives in this country and has just been through an operation for an affection of the throat, is very fond of pets. Behind the gardens of Blenheim castle are a fairly extensive menagerie, containing creatures collected in all parts of the world, and an aviary, where gaunt vultures, cumbrous pelicans and graceful cranes stalk around the cages of the song birds and bright plumaged rarities from the tropics. She adds to this list whenever an opportunity arises, and if many more birds arrive there will not be any room for them, and the old inmates of the aviary will doubtless see that their feathers fly. The duchess makes a striking picture surrounded by her animals and birds. Many of the animals in her collection she obtained on a trip to Egypt made not long ago.

DUCHESS OF MARLBOROUGH.

The duchess was formerly Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt, daughter of William K. Vanderbilt, and she received a $10,000,000 dowry on her marriage to the duke in 1895. She is a very clever and quick witted young woman. It is related that she was walking in Blenheim park soon after she became mistress of the ducal estate when one of the villagers of Woodstock greeted her. This villager had just been married, and his bride was with him. He had the bad taste, after introducing the young woman, to add:

"A poor thing, but mine own, your grace."

The duchess frowned at this inapt quotation. She turned to the embarrassed bride and said:

"You might say now of your husband truthfully, 'A poorer thing, but mine owner.'"

The interest in the trial of the beef trust cases brings into the public eye Judge J. Otis Humphrey, who presides over the court having jurisdiction in this important contest. It was Judge Humphrey who a short time ago imposed fines aggregating $25,000 upon four members of the packing firm of Schwarzschild & Sulzberger, they having pleaded guilty to violating the Elkins law in accepting railroad rebates. Judge Humphrey enjoys a high reputation as an able and learned jurist. He was born in Morgan county, Ill., in 1850, reared on a farm, educated in the public schools and at Shurtleff college, Alton, Ill., and in 1879, at Auburn, Ill., married Miss Mary E. Scott. Like many others who have become eminent at the bar, Judge Humphrey taught school for several years while studying for the legal profession. He was admitted to the bar in 1880 and for three years thereafter was legal clerk in the office of the railroad and warehouse commissioners of Illinois. He became active in the Republican party, and served as a presidential elector in 1884 and as a delegate to the national convention of 1896. In 1897 he was appointed United States district attorney for the southern district of Illinois and served in that position until he became United States judge for the same district in the year 1901.

been delivered, is one of the western governors who stand for pure politics and elimination of graft in government. He is the man who was elected governor because his opponents charged that his father was a drunkard and his mother took in washing. He admitted that the charge was true, and when the voters of Minnesota heard the story of how the boy of ten left school to help his mother support the family and how at fourteen he was the main breadwinner of the household and his mother was able to give up doing laundry work for other people—when they learned of all the self denial and industry and enterprise that had characterized the career of the Democratic candidate for governor they turned in and elected him by a majority which under the circumstances was simply astonishing. He ran ahead of his presidential ticket in the state 140,000 votes. Although Mr. Roosevelt carried the state by 125,000 plurality, about one Republican in every four went to the polls in wrath at the attempt to defeat Johnson because his mother was a washerwoman and cast a ballot for him.

It is now thirty-two years since the mother of the governor ceased her efforts to earn an honest living at the washtub. Speaking of her son's early struggles, she once said:

"I never have been prouder of him than I was the evening he came home and told me that his salary had been increased and that he would no longer permit me to do washing. He took care of us all in times of illness. Few mothers have been blessed with such sons."

Mrs. Clarence Mackay, says Harper's Weekly, wanted to make a birthday present to a good little girl who went to school.

"I'll give you a doll," she said.

The little girl thanked her.

"What kind of a doll do you want?"

"Twins, please."

And twins it was.

President T. Estrada Palma of Cuba, who is likely to serve as the Cuban executive for another four years, is a veteran in the cause of his countrymen. He is the candidate of the Moderate party for re-election, and the result of the contest will not be known until December, but in the recent election for boards of registry the Moderates triumphed in all parts of the island, and this is taken to mean the success of their candidate in the general election two months hence. The Moderates stand for the maintenance of close relations with the United States, and the chief charge against General Palma is that of too great friendliness with this country. Prior to his election as president of Cuba in 1901 he had lived quietly in the United States for a period of about twenty years, earning a livelihood at teaching and farming in Central Valley, N. Y., but his life has not always been peaceful. He was born at Bayamo, Cuba, in 1836, and in 1868, soon after he had completed his education in Spain at the University of Seville, he took the field at the head of a large company of patriots who were anxious to throw off the Spanish yoke. He fought throughout the long struggle known as the Ten Years' war and was president of the provisional government organized by the revolutionists at that time. The Spaniards captured him in 1877. He refused to take the oath of allegiance, saying that he preferred to die as president of the Cuban republic. The Spaniards released him a year later, and he went to Honduras, where he became postmaster general. Then came his stay in the United States. When his countrymen again began fighting for freedom from Spain he became the delegate of the Cuban junta to this country and in that capacity performed most valuable service. When the United States withdrew from Cuba in 1901 and the new republic was duly established he became its first president.

T. ESTRADA PALMA.

According to Mrs. Frederick Schoff, president of the National Mothers' Congress, former United States Senator Frank J. Cannon of Utah has been condemned to die by Mormons. "Ex-Senator Cannon is a hero, and he may prove to be a martyr." Mrs. Schoff is quoted as saying. "He came of the Mormons, and his father, a Mormon apostle, has disowned him because he is fighting for his state against the hierarchy." Frank J. Cannon is a son of George Q. Cannon, is forty-six years of age and is a graduate of Utah university. Soon after he left the university he made San Francisco his home and became a newspaper man. Subsequently he returned to Utah, entered politics and was elected United States senator in 1896. When he was in the senate he seriously proposed to congress that a tract of several acres near Washington should be purchased and converted into a relief map, showing all the mountains, rivers, lakes, cities, railroads, etc., at a glance. Between each state he wanted a path constructed along which the visitor could walk and get a birdseye view in miniature, as it were, of the country.

FRANK J. CANNON.

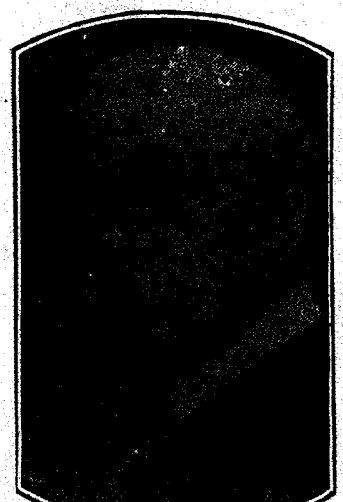
Cleveland and Woman Suffrage

IT is natural that the public should be interested in the views which the only living ex-president of the United States, Grover Cleveland takes on questions of current discussion. Mr. Cleveland does not often emerge from his retirement to make an utterance upon a public platform, but he now and then contributes to some periodical an expression of his opinions on a subject that has engaged his thought and study. A discussion of the woman suffrage question, which he has given to the world through the medium of a popular magazine, has recently occasioned comment, and in it the former executive of the nation takes strong ground against extending the ballot to woman. Mr. Cleveland thinks that such action would hurt woman herself more than it could possibly benefit society in general. In support of this opinion he cites facts regarding the operation of woman suffrage in states where it has been tried.

Although Mr. Cleveland has retired from politics and in the classic shades of Princeton, N. J., which he makes his home during the most of the year, pursues in quiet his study of the subjects that appeal to his interest, he does not ask to be relieved of responsibility as a citizen and member of the community. When the revelations as to the management of the Equitable Life Assurance society led to a demand for the reorganization of the institution under the supervision of a committee composed of men of high standing and disinterested motives he consented to serve as a member of such a body. With George Westinghouse and Justice Morgan J. O'Brien, he gave his time and energy for the good of the business community.

As a lawyer Mr. Cleveland might have returned to the practice of his profession, as the late Benjamin Harrison did when he left the White House. This he has not seen fit to do.

FORMER PRESIDENT GROVER CLEVELAND.



He is thought to be a wealthier man than ex-President Harrison was at the conclusion of his single term in 1892. Mr. Cleveland served two terms as president, which means drawing a salary of $50,000 per annum for eight years. He was fairly well off when he became chief executive, and he is reputed to have made various profitable investments. It is said that his income from what he has laid aside or invested is from $8,000 to $10,000, to which he adds an average of about $8,000 that comes to him as revenue from his writings for publication.

The Cleveland family have spent the past two summers in an old farmhouse at Sandwich, N. H. It is a very unpretentious residence, but comfortable, in the midst of delightful scenery and convenient to good fishing grounds, an important item in the mind of the ex-president. The house was built in the latter part of the eighteenth century by a Quaker, whose descendants still own it, and its appearance has not changed a great deal since the original owner finished its construction. After the death of her daughter Ruth, Mrs. Cleveland shrank from going back to the summer home at Buzzards Bay, and Professor John H. Finley, formerly of Princeton, but now president of the College of the City of New York, suggested that the family try Sandwich, where he goes for the summer. They tried it in 1904 and liked it so well they went again last summer. Dr. Finley has a farmhouse near theirs, and the families are much together. Professor Finley, Professor Van Dyke of Princeton and the ex-president often go fishing together in Lake Ossipee or Duncan lake, not far away. Sometimes last summer little Richard Folsom Cleveland, the ex-president's son, now nine years of age, was taken along, and it is said he shows signs of being as good a sportsman as his father one of these days. Sandwich is ten miles from a railway station, and the house occupied by the Clevelands is about a mile from the main highway, so that it is rather difficult for curious strangers to intrude upon the retirement which is so much enjoyed by Mr. Cleveland in his declining years. His chief thoughts are now given to the bringing up of his children and to studies which may be pursued without leaving the seclusion which he prefers.

AN ENTHUSIAST IN ART.

Sir Caspar Purdon Clarke, Director of Metropolitan Museum.

Sir Caspar Purdon Clarke, who recently took up his duties as director of New York's great Metropolitan Museum of Art, is a man of interesting personality as well as remarkable attainments in the field of art. As head of the most important art institution in America he is expected to give the people of this country the benefit of the wide experience he has had both in the practice of his profession as an architect and in the direction of one of the foremost art museums of Great Britain. Sir Purdon, as he is usually called, is an enthusiast in the application of art collections to the practical purposes of education and to the elevation of the popular taste. It is anticipated that under his administration the usefulness of the Metropolitan museum will be widely extended and greater encouragement given to the talents of American artists. The late General di Cesnola, whom Sir Purdon succeeds as director of the Metropolitan, was a great archaeologist, but it was always considered that he was somewhat prejudiced against the work of native American artists and that in consequence it did not receive sufficient representation in the collections of the museum.

Though he has been honored with knighthood and is on terms of friendship with the British monarch, Sir Purdon is not the kind of man to stand on his dignity. Not long before his election to the directorate of the Metropolitan friends found him working in his shirt sleeves along with some laborers in the South Kensington museum, of which he was then art director. "There's no sense in putting on airs with workmen," he said to one who expressed surprise that he should thus sacrifice his dignity.

Sir Purdon is fifty-eight years of age and was educated for the profession of architect at the South Kensington museum. In 1865 he gained there the national medallion for a set of designs for an old English house, and from that time his connection with the museum in one capacity or another was almost continuous up to the present year. He became art director in 1896 and retained the post until he was chosen director of the Metropolitan museum a short time ago.

A LEARNED HINDOO.

Hon. P. Ramanathan and His Mission to This Country.

The Hon. P. Ramanathan, K. C., C. M. G., solicitor general of Ceylon, who arrived not long ago in the United States, did not come here simply to see the country and enjoy a pleasant vacation. Mr. Ramanathan belongs to what has long been the chief Hindoo family of Ceylon, he has large wealth, has represented his race in the legislative council of Ceylon, and was a delegate from that island to Queen Victoria's jubilee. But it is on his learning and spiritual insight that his chief claim to distinction rests, and his mission to this country is to clear away many of the misunderstandings which exist here in regard to the religious ideas of India.

He believes that there should be harmony rather than antagonism between teachers of the Christian and Hindoo faiths. He has written commentaries upon the Christian Scriptures which have induced orthodox pundits of India to treat the Christian Bible with a greater degree of consideration, and his study of the gospels and the books of the Old Testament has convinced him that between them and the sacred writings in Sanskrit and Tamil, whence Buddhism drew inspiration, there is harmony in all essential matters.

The Dinner Party.

That the success of a dinner party does not depend on the excellence of the chef, but on the proper assortment of the company, was precisely the opinion of a very witty old lady, who wisely said, "My dear, it isn't the menu that makes a good dinner; it's the men you sit next to."

The Laughing Jackass.

The kookaburra, or, as it is generally called, "the laughing jackass," is common in Australia, where its presence is fostered and beloved by the population of the island continent. The ringing laugh of the feathered comedian is welcome music to antipodeans, and its presence in the depths of the melancholy Australian bush is as a high light on a somber picture. Great indeed is the astonishment of visitors to Australia who for the first time hear the wonderful burst of laughter to which this remarkable bird gives vent. Its laugh is intensely human, and it seems a remarkable act of Providence that the little creature is to be found amid such fitting environment. After hours and hours of lonely journeying through the great silent bush, which engenders melancholy thought, comes the mirth provoking outburst of this strange bird like a ray of sunshine on a cloudy sky.

Experimented With Poisons.

When Antony and Cleopatra were contemplating suicide they made a collection of a great variety of poisons and tried each of them on two or more slaves in order to ascertain whether death was accompanied with much apparent suffering. One historian declares that over 200 persons lost their lives in order that the information might be obtained. The result was that Antony killed himself with a dagger and Cleopatra either with one of her selected poisons or by a serpent's bite.

Antiquity of Soap.

The origin of soap is a mystery, but we have many evidences of its antiquity. It is mentioned at least twice in the Bible under the name of borith at a period corresponding to several centuries before Christ. In the Louvre in Paris there is an interesting old vase of Etruscan manufacture whose age is computed at about 2,500 years. It is interesting in connection with our subject as bearing a group of children in relief who are engaged in blowing bubbles from pipes. Though we must not overlook the fact that certain vegetable juices are capable of being used in blowing bubbles, it is for many reasons more probable that soap of artificial manufacture was employed for the purpose. In the unearthed city of Pompeii, the preservation of which has been the means of revealing to us many antique customs, there is to be seen a soap manufactory, with all the kettles and other paraphernalia pertaining to the business; also a quantity of soap, evidently the product of this antique "soapery." The memorable volcanic eruption, while removing a city from the face of the earth, preserved to us the evidences of a high civilization.

A Kind Voice.

There is no power of love so hard to get and to keep as a kind voice. A kind hand is deaf and dumb. It may be rough in flesh and blood, yet do the work of a soft heart and do it with a soft touch. But there is no one thing that love so much needs as a sweet voice to tell what it means and feels, and it is hard to get and keep it in the right tone. One must start in youth and be on the watch night and day, at work and at play, to get and keep a voice that shall speak at all times the thoughts of a kind heart. It is often in youth that one gets a voice or a tone that is sharp, and it sticks to him through life and stirs up ill will and grief and falls like a drop of gall on the sweets of home. Watch it day by day as a pearl of great price, for it will be worth more to you in days to come than the best pearl hid in the sens. A kind voice is to the heart what light is to the eye. It is a light that sings as well as shines.—Elihu Burritt.

Faith Not Necessary.

You may be just as skeptical and pessimistic as you please. Kodol will digest what you eat whether you eat or not. You can put your food in a bowl, pour a little Kodol Dyspepsia Cure on it and it will digest it the same as it will in your stomach. It can't help but cure indigestion and dyspepsia. It is curing hundreds and thousands—some had faith and some didn't. Kodol will cure you if medicine can cure you, whether you have faith in it or not. Mrs. J. P. Bailey, Waugh, Va., says: "I am 81 years old. Several years I suffered extremely with indigestion and dyspepsia. My grandson, A. Baily, Jr., a merchant at Allwood, Va., sent me a bottle of Kodol Despepsia Cure. The world ought to know of the supreme benefits an aged sufferer has received from this great medicine. It entirely cured me and can eat all food." Sold by H. C. Giesler and G. T. Boyington.

When Man Wooes.

The average man wooes for choice a humming bird of the most gorgeous plumage. The man's taste is perfectly understandable. The mistake comes later. When he has secured his bird he carries it home and expects to find in the cage a demure little canary possessed of every staid, domestic and canarylike attribute.—London Queen.

Mrs. Jawback—Get right away from here, you nasty tramp, or I'll call my husband! Oliver Mudd—G'wan! Yer husband ain't to home. Mrs. Jawback—How do you know? Oliver Mudd—Husbands of women like you never are to home 'cept for meals.—Cleveland Leader.

Nasal Catarrh quickly yields to treatment by Ely's Cream Balm, which is agreeably aromatic. It is received through the nostrils, cleanses and heals the whole surface over which it diffuses itself. A remedy for Nasal Catarrh which is drying or exciting to the diseased membrane should not be used. Cream Balm is recognized as a specific. Price 50 cents at druggists or by mail. A cold in the head immediately disappears when Cream Balm is used. Ely Brothers, 56 Warren Street, New York.

The Way You Do It.

One reads that Darwin never understood an equation, and the chances are that Isaac Newton could not have passed any examination in literary or aesthetic subjects, with his idea that poetry was ingenious nonsense and statuary only stone dolls. Faraday had no gift for mathematics, and it is a mooted question if Napoleon Bonaparte could have passed a college entrance examination in French. But it was their ability to do some one thing well that has turned the world upside down at various times in its forward march, not their inability to do badly what all the world only does moderately well. It makes little difference what you do—the difference lies in the way you do it. The business world is overstocked with poor people, looking for good positions, while good positions are waiting for good people to fill them.

Tides.

The following is given in brief as the theory most generally entertained by scientists, with a few exceptions, concerning tides: It is assumed that the moon, acting alone, would not only raise a wave on the side of the earth nearest to it by gravitation, but would also draw the earth itself far enough out of its course to leave behind some of the water on the farther side, which water would then be raised relatively to the earth's surface and constitute the second tidal wave. The sun alone would act similarly, although its tide raising effect is only about two-fifths that of the moon. Now, at new moon the sun and moon "pull together" and give higher tides than at the first and third quarters, when the sun draws its right angles to the line of the moon's attraction, and at full moon, when the sun is on the opposite side of the earth from the moon, virtually the same effect is observed as at new moon, but the double tide raising action of the sun would again be superimposed on that of the moon and give tides on opposite sides as high as those a fortnight before.

A Judicious Inquiry.

A well known traveling man who visits the drug trade says he has often heard druggists inquire of customers who asked for a cough medicine, whether it was wanted for a child or an adult, and if for a child they almost invariably recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The reason for this is that they know there is no danger from it and that it always cures. There is not the least danger in giving it, and for coughs, colds and croup, it is unsurpassed. Was Willing to Go to Sea.

At the time when William E. Chandler of New Hampshire was secretary of the navy Admiral Meade was commandant of the navy yard in Washington. They got into trouble somehow, these two positive gentlemen, and the commandant was summoned before the secretary one day on a matter of importance. The secretary told the commandant that if he kept on, or words to that effect, he should certainly be obliged to punish him by sending him to sea. "Mr. Secretary," said Meade, "I haven't anything to say except that when it is punishment for an officer of the navy to be ordered to sea, what is your service coming to? I should like to go to sea, sir. Good day."

Zangwill's Revenge.

While yet an obscure writer Israel Zangwill submitted to an American magazine a poem, which he received back in due course with the customary slip expressing the editor's great sorrow at his inability to make use of the contribution.

The manuscript found its way into a pigeonhole, to be resurrected some time later when fame had found him out. The poem was sold to the same magazine to which it had originally been sent, but this time the editor cabled a request to the author and paid a fancy price for it.

How Derelicts Are Destroyed

THE United States cruiser Columbia did valuable service recently in destroying a derelict, the wrecked schooner Edward L. Warren, which was drifting about in the Atlantic ocean about 120 miles off Sandy Hook. Derelicts constitute a great menace to ocean navigation, and the federal government has devised ways and means of securing information about them so as to clear the path of ocean traffic as far as possible of such obstructions. Whenever a master of a ship sights a derelict it is his duty on arriving in port to forward all the information in his possession to the United States hydrographic office, giving details as to latitude and longitude, condition when last observed, etc. From this information the federal officials make up charts which indicate approximately the course of the derelict, and such charts are furnished to vessels leaving port to enable them to avoid the track of the vagabonds of the sea.

The smaller vessels of the navy are often detailed to find derelicts and either destroy them or bring them into port. To the officers and crews of the vessels such a detail is usually welcome, for it breaks the monotony, affords a little excitement and a chance for marksmanship and sometimes is accompanied with danger. In blowing up the Edward L. Warren the men of the Columbia who did the job ran a chance of being hit by flying timbers, for heavy pieces of the wreck fell near the small boats and might have sunk them had they fallen closer. While on search for the Edward L. Warren the Columbia was kept informed by wireless telegraphy of all reports from incoming captains about the location of the derelict, and the chase was maintained for two days. When the abandoned hulk was sighted about two miles distant preparations were at once made for its destruction. A chain was passed under the hull by the men from the Columbia who boarded the wreck and a torpedo was attached so that it came directly under the hull about amidships. The men returned to their boats after making connection by means of a slender copper wire and rowed about 150 yards away. When the charge was exploded a great mass of timber was hurled skyward, but the hulk was not sunk, and five explosions were necessary before the wreck was no longer a menace to passing ships.

The tactics used in the case of this derelict were those usually employed. Sometimes, if the derelict destroyer is furnished with a ram, this method of destruction serves the purpose. In 1893 the cruiser San Francisco sighted the abandoned three masted schooner Drisko and attempted to blow her up. Three gun cotton torpedoes were attached to the keel and exploded; but, while much damage was done, the hulk remained afloat. Five more torpedoes were then exploded under her keel, breaking her back and frames, but even this was not sufficient to sink her. Then the San Francisco rammed the Drisko violently amidships. This broke her in two parts, the cargo was released, and the hulk began sinking. Thinking to finish the job, the warship fired a few shells into the stern to scatter the fragments of the ship remaining afloat. Even after all this treatment some parts of the vessel kept above the waves and gave sailors who sighted them a scare. The United States collier Lebanon was recently ordered to set out from Portsmouth navy yard and patrol the north Atlantic in search of dangerous derelicts. Besides a crew of merchant sailors she carries a gunner and a gunner's mate and three seamen from the navy to handle explosives and attend to destruction of derelicts when they are encountered. The Lebanon will generally use dynamite in ridding the ocean of abandoned hulks. She will probably be kept busy for the next few months, as the autumn is the great time of the year for wrecks, and sometimes there are hundreds of them in the gulf stream following the storms of the autumn and early winter. The astonishing number of 1,692 were reported by the hydrographic office off the Atlantic coast in a period of seven years. The government is doing great good in ridding the public highways [illegible] of dangers.

SPEAKER NIXON DEAD.

Succumbed to Disease Yesterday at His Home in Westfield.

TAKEN ILL SEVERAL WEEKS AGO.

An Operation For Appendicitis Performed and He Seemed to Rally—Recovery Retarded by Unwillingness of Wound to Heal—Wound Reopened but Reaction Was Only Temporary.

Westfield, N. Y., Oct. 11.—S. Fred Nixon, speaker of the assembly, died at his home here yesterday. Mr. Nixon was first taken ill several weeks ago with what seemed to be an attack of appendicitis. Simple measures were effective and it was announced that Mr. Nixon was in no danger. He was supposed to be doing nicely when pneumonia developed, accompanied by pleurisy.

Mr. Nixon seemed to be improving when a sudden turn for the worse came. An operation was performed and he seemed to rally from it. Since the operation his recovery had been retarded only by the unwillingness of the wound to heal.

Early yesterday after a consultation an anaesthetic was administered and the wound was reopened widely. Decomposed tissue was removed and the wound was drained. Mr. Nixon seemed to rally from the operation but the reaction was only temporary. Soon he began to grow weaker and at noon it was little more than a question of hours. He sank lower and lower and died at 4:50 p. m.

Gathered at the bedside were Mrs. Nixon and two of her children. One son was absent. He was at school at Cornwall-on-the-Hudson. He is now on his way home.

Mr. Nixon is survived by his widow, two sons and one daughter.

Mr. Nixon was born in Westfield, Chautauqua county, in 1860. He was graduated from Hamilton college in 1881 and three years later was elected a trustee in Westfield. After holding the office of supervisor he was elected to the assembly in 1887. He was re-elected 14 times and was for seven terms chosen speaker. He was renominated the 15th time after he was taken with what proved to be his last illness.

PROCLAMATION BY GOVERNOR.

Flags on All State Buildings to Be Half-Masted Till After the Funeral.

Albany, Oct. 11.—Governor Higgins said last night concerning the death of Speaker S. Fred Nixon:

"Mr. Nixon's death is a great shock to me. He was a man who commanded the confidence of his associates to a very marked degree. He was a loyal friend, and I feel that I have met with a great personal loss."

The governor has issued the following proclamation:

The people of the state of New York learn with sorrow of the untimely death of Hon. S. Fred Nixon, the speaker of the assembly. He had the affection and respect of all who knew him. In his long service in the legislature he had won a position of deserved and recognized leadership. His young and useful life gave fair promise of brilliant success in wider fields. His broad experience, his tact and his sound judgment rendered him exceptionally well qualified for his responsible and arduous duties. His death leaves a vacant place that cannot easily be filled.

It is proper that the governor should in the absence of the legislature make official recognition of the loss sustained by the people and publicly express the respect due to the character and services of the deceased.

Now, therefore, I, Frank W. Higgins, governor of the state of New York, do direct that the flags upon all the public buildings of the state, including the armories and arsenals, be displayed at half-mast up to and including the day of the funeral.

Given under my hand and the privy seal of the state at the Capitol in the city of Albany, this tenth day of October in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and five.

Frank W. Higgins.

General Strike in Moscow.

Moscow, Oct. 11.—The majority of the factories here joined in the strike of printers and bakers. The movement threatens to become general though it is opposed by a strong minority of the workmen. The streets are comparatively tranquil. Several times processions of striking workmen in which red flags were carried were held in the industrial quarters and the police were forced to disperse the crowds but aside from the affray yesterday at the Liebrecht furniture factory no bloodshed has been reported. Crowds of roughs started to break the windows in the Tverskol boulevard, the center of the previous disorders, which has been reopened to traffic, but they fled when the police approached.

Hunts Friend; Dies in Desert.

Los Angeles, Oct. 11.—Judge W. E. Hailey of Superior, Wis., is believed to have perished on the desert near Searchlight, Nev., while searching for his friend C. J. Thomas, also of Superior, who disappeared on the sands several weeks ago and is believed to have died. The locality is known as "the graveyard of Nevada" and long has been feared by all mining prospectors. Searching parties [illegible] out.

TABLETS IN HALL OF FAME.

Three Women and Five Men Were Chosen Yesterday.

New York, Oct 11—Three women and five men were chosen yesterday to receive tablets in the Hall of Fame at New York university. Maria Mitchel was the only American scientist to be elected at this time, though Louis Agassiz, with 82 votes, secured admission as a foreign-born American.

A curious commentary on Maria Mitchell's election is the fact that eight of the electors, chiefly scientists refused to vote for any woman, thus reducing the number of votes necessary to elect a woman to 47, while 51 were required for a man.

Mary Lyon, founder of Mount Holyoke college, and Emma Willard, the author of "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep," and a famous educator, were the other women honored.

Alexander Hamilton with 87 votes the highest number received by any candidate at this election, and John Paul Jones with 53, share with Agassiz the honors of being the first American immortals of foreign birth.

Two American statesmen were chosen—John Quincy Adams, whose tablet will occupy a niche next to that of his father, John Adams, he having received 58 votes; and James Madison who secured admission with 56 votes.

Patrick Henry, John C. Calhoun and Andrew Jackson fell a half dozen votes short of securing bronze tablets to record their fame, and Samuel Adams was again defeated. James Monroe's votes numbered only 23 Seward, Sumner, Dewitt Clinton, Garfield, John Jay and Stanton were among the statesmen who failed to be elected.

ANNUAL MEETING OF WABASH.

Indication That Six Directors Nominated by Gould Faction Will Be Elected.

Toledo, O., Oct. 11.—No directors were chosen at the annual meeting of the Wabash railroad here yesterday. The sessions with the exceptions of two brief recesses lasted from 9 o'clock in the morning to 11:15 at night, almost the entire time being taken up by the examination of proxies.

Although no figures had been given out by the inspectors of election it is believed that the vote to be taken the first thing today will show that Mr Gould has behind him about $22,000,000 of the bonds and that Mr. Ramsey has in the neighborhood of $2,000,000

This makes certain that six men nominated by the Gould faction as directors representing the bondholders will be elected. The men are Russell Sage, Winslow S. Pierce, R. C. Clowry, E. T. Welles, W. B. Saunders and R. M. Galloway.

Mr. Ramsey has not shown sufficient strength to enable him to hold his seat as a director, and it is generally believed that he is weaker in stock proxies than he is in the bonds.

Population of Rochester.

Albany, Oct. 11.—The population of Rochester announced by the state enumeration bureau is 181,672, an increase of 19,064 over the federal census of 1900. Of this increase 1,145 is due to the annexation of part of the town of Brighton, last April. The actually enumerated population was 182,028, but from this was deducted 881 inmates of local institutions having residences elsewhere and to it were added 525 inmates of outside institutions who were residents of Rochester.

CITY CONVENTIONS.

Candidates for Mayor, City Judge, Aldermen and Supervisors Placed in Nomination by the Republican, Democratic and Prohibition Parties.

REPUBLICAN PROCEEDINGS.

The Republican City Convention was called to order last Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock by Dr. H. L. Lake, chairman of the City Committee. The roll of delegates was called by Secretary H. Putnam Allen.

F. D. Van Wagenen's name was substituted for Thomas Hunter's on the Fourth Ward delegation because of Mr. Hunter's absence from the city.

The selection of a chairman being in order, J. J. Little of the Third Ward presented F. D. Van Wagenen's name, while Mayor Brooker placed Frank L. Sears of the First Ward in nomination for the same office.

Mayor Brooker and the Webb delegates, numbering sixteen in all, had decided to conduct the selection of chairman by roll-call—that is, each delegate was requested to respond to his name when called, and express his preference.

Mr. Van Wagenen opposed the motion, hoping to conduct such proceedure by ballot.

The vote on the resolution was a tie—sixteen delegates voting for and sixteen against the proposition. The convention voted three times on the resolution with a like result, when a five-minute recess was taken.

On reassembling, Mr. Van Wagenen renewed his motion—that the convention proceed to ballot for temporary chairman.

This was amended by Mayor Brooker—that the convention select a temporary chairman by roll call.

Louis Mosher of the First Ward, who had been elected as a Webb delegate, voted in favor of the Van Wagenen resolution, and it was carried.

On motion of Dr. Scott the temporary chairman became permanent.

Dr. H. L. Lake, the retiring chairman of the City Committee, before resigning his office as temporary chairman of the convention, thanked the members for the cordial support and co-operation that had been accorded the City Committee during his tenure of office, which had lasted several years.

Calvin R. Dines and Robert Hunter became secretaries and F. J. Switzer and F. H. French were selected as tellers.

After the officers were sworn in, nominations for Mayor were in order.

J. J. Little placed Edward Quirk in nomination and William Church presented Theodore H. Webb's name to the convention.

Mayor Brooker moved that the convention proceed to select a candidate by roll call of delegates, which was amended to proceed by ballot, but the amendment was lost.

The roll being called on nominations for Mayor, Louis Mosher of the First Ward voted for Quirk and the latter became the choice of the delegates by a vote of 17 to 15.

On motion of Mayor Brooker the nomination was made unanimous.

Chairman Van Wagenen experienced some difficulty in securing a committee to wait on Edward Quirk and notify him of his nomination. Mayor Brooker was selected and accepted, Mylo Lewis and William Church of the Sixth ward and Calvin R. Dines of the First ward were requested to act but declined. The committee finally selected was Messrs. Brooker, Snyder and Dr. Haviland.

Mr. Van Wagenen explained to the convention that the nominee was ill and confined to bed. It was also alleged that the nomination was unsought and the candidate was unpleged.

A committee composed of Drs. Haviland and Scott and E. R. Rhodes was chosen to fill any vacancy that might occur on the ticket.

The following City Committeemen were selected:

First ward—Frank L. Sears.
Second ward—Joshua Rigley.
Third ward—A. W. Stoneburg.
Fourth ward—Charles R. Guile.
Fifth ward—F. M. Cornell.
Sixth ward—H. Putnam Allen.

NOMINATION FOR CITY JUDGE.

Mayor Brooker placed Fred'k G. Spencer in nomination for city judge and Mylo Lewis presented William S. Hillick's name for same office.

The vote was Spencer, 23; Hillick, 9.

Mr. Spencer's nomination was made unanimous.

The chair appointed Messrs. Little, Switzer and Bradford a committee to notify Mr. Spencer of his nomination.

On being presented to the convention the nominee promised, if elected, to discharge the duties in a just and fearless manner.

The convention adjourned.

At a subsequent meeting of the City Committee, F. M. Cornell was elected chairman.

DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

The Democratic City Convention assembled in the City Hall on Wednesday evening, and was called to order by Chairman John Brennan of the City Committee. A resolution to adjourn until Thursday evening was adopted, notwithstanding a vigorous protest against such a proceeding by Frank Newkirk of the Sixth ward.

On Thursday evening the convention reassembled and John R. Sullivan of the Second ward was unanimously elected chairman. Messrs. Thomas Mosso of the Sixth ward and Orrin Bogardus of the First ward became secretaries and Messrs. John Mott of the Second ward and William Murphy of the Fourth ward were elected tellers.

The officials took the required oath of office and the chairmen of the several ward delegations handed in their credentials.

Nominations for mayor being in order, W. J. Hartnett of the Second ward presented the name of John N. Foster, which was duly seconded.

Eugene Austin of the Third ward placed John N. Sharp in nomination. This was seconded by Frank Newkirk, who stated that while he and Mr. Sharp had not always been in political accord, yet he had agreed to stand for Mr. Sharp's candidacy and would support him.

On motion of Attorney W. C. Stephens an informal ballot was taken, resulting as follows: John N. Foster, 20, John N. Sharp, 10.

On motion of Mr. Newkirk the nomination of John N. Foster was made unanimous.

CITY JUDGE.

W. H. Patterson placed Attorney Melville F. Stephens in nomination for city judge and he was unanimously selected.

The City Committee was authorized to fill any vacancy that might occur on the ticket.

Messrs. John R. Sullivan, Thomas Mosso and Orin Bogardus were selected as a committee to notify Mr. Foster and Mr. Stephens of their nomination.

Subsequently the committee waited upon Mr. Foster and he accepted the nomination.

A. P. Bradt became permanent chairman; William Klein, secretary, and Messrs. Mack and Hewitt, tellers.

The following nominations were made:

Camera Club Reception.

The Fulton Camera club gave a "house warming" on Friday evening in their new club rooms in the Gardner block, which partook of the nature of a reception and banquet, covers being laid for about seventy-five. The rooms were decorated with palms ferns and Autumn branches and the place cards consisted of artificial Autumn leaves upon which had been inscribed a sonnet, description of the guest.

Mrs. O. A. Casler was chairman o the banquet committee and in her successful efforts she was aided and abetted by the committee.

Mr. O. A. Casler gracefully presided as toastmaster, and after coffee the Rev. W. L. Sawtelle spoke interestingly of his trip abroad and of the advantages of a camera upon such a trip.

Mr. Irving Galusha cleverly and happily responded to the toast "Living pictures." Mr. W. H. Hornibrook in his toast, "The ladies," proved that chivalry is not dead. Mr. Justin Morrill, president of the club, gave an outline of the work of the club and the plans for the Winter.

A vote of thanks was tendered Mrs. Casler for her efficient services toward the success of the banquet.

Baraca Class.

An option upon the farm owned by Elmer Taylor, which has been used as Baraca Park this Summer, was read at the class meeting on Sunday. The spot is ideal for all class purposes and Mr. Taylor has made a moderate price upon it which brings it well within the reach of the class. The question of choice between the Taylor and Case property on Lake Neahtawanta, will soon be given the class for decision. Stock is rapidly selling in the corporation.

The "white" side will enjoy a banquet in the Baraca class room on Friday evening, from 5.30 to 8.30, at the expense of the "green" side, in the attendance contest just closed. Covers will be laid for 200, and an elaborate menu has been prepared.

Mr. Irving Galusha on Sunday evening gave his report of the National Convention in Detroit, to which he was a delegate. The local class is the largest Baraca Class in the United States.

Some Seasonable Advice.

It may be a piece of superfluous advice to urge people at this season of the year to lay in a supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is almost sure to be needed before winter is over, and much more prompt and satisfactory results are obtained when taken as soon as a cold is contracted and before it has become settled in the system, which can only be done by keeping the remedy at hand. This remedy is so widely known and so altogether good that no one should hesitate about buying it in preference to any other. It is for sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Could Not Be Better.

The uniform success of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera ann Diarrhoea Remedy has won for it a wide reputation and many people throughout the country will agree with Mr. Charles W. Mattison, of Milford, Va., who says: "It works like magic, and is the best preparation I know of. It couldn't be any better." He had a serious attack of dysentery and was advised to try a bottle of this remedy, which he did, with the result that immediate relief was obtained. For sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

CONCURRENT RESOLUTIONS, 1905.

STATE OF NEW YORK, OFFICE OF THE Secretary of State, Albany, July 25, 1905.—Pursuant to the provisions of section one of article fourteen of the Constitution of the State of New York, and section seven of chapter nine hundred and nine of the Laws of eighteen hundred and ninety-six, notice is hereby given that the following proposed amendment to section ten of article eight of the Constitution of the State of New York is to be submitted to the people for approval at the next General Election in this State to be held on the seventh day of November, nineteen hundred and five, and is published once a week for three months next preceding such General Election in conformity with the aforesaid provisions. JOHN F. O'BRIEN, Secretary of State.

AMENDMENT NUMBER ONE.

Concurrent Resolution of the Senate and Assembly, proposing an amendment to section ten of article eight of the constitution, relating to the limitation of indebtedness of counties, cities, towns and villages by excepting the city of New York from the provisions of said section after the first day of January, nineteen hundred and four.

Whereas, The legislature at its regular session in nineteen hundred and one duly adopted a resolution providing for an amendment to the constitution relating to the limitation of indebtedness of counties, cities, towns and villages, by excepting the city of New York from the provisions of said section after the first day of January, nineteen hundred and four; and Whereas, Such resolution has been duly published in accordance with law and the constitution, and referred to this legislature for action; therefore: Section 1. Resolved (if the assembly concur), That section ten of article eight of the constitution be amended to read as follows: Article VIII. § 10. No county, city, town or village shall hereafter give any money or property, or loan its money or credit to or in aid of any individual, association or corporation, or become directly or indirectly the owner of stock in, or bonds of, any association or corporation; nor shall any such county, city, town or village be allowed to incur any indebtedness except for county, city or town or village purposes. This section shall not prevent such county, city, town or village from making such provision for the aid or support of its poor as may be authorized by law. No county or city shall be allowed to become indebted for any purpose or in any manner to an amount which, including existing indebtedness, shall exceed ten per centum of the assessed valuation of the real estate of such county or city subject to taxation, as it appeared by the assessment rolls of said county or city on the last assessment for state or county taxes prior to the incurring of such indebtedness; and all indebtedness in excess of such limitation, except such as now may exist, shall be absolutely void, except as herein otherwise provided. No county or city whose present indebtedness exceeds ten per centum of the assessed valuation of its real estate subject to taxation, shall be allowed to become indebted in any further amount until such indebtedness shall be reduced within such limit. This section shall not be construed to prevent the issuing of certificates of indebtedness or revenue bonds issued in anticipation of the collection of taxes for amounts actually contained, to be contained, in the taxes for the year when such certificates or revenue bonds are issued and payable out of such taxes. Nor shall this section be construed to prevent the issue of bonds to provide for the supply of water; but the term of the bonds issued to provide the supply of water shall not exceed twenty years, and a sinking fund shall be created on the issuing of the said bonds for their redemption, by raising annually a sum which will produce an amount equal to the sum of the principal and interest of said bonds at their maturity. All certificates of indebtedness or revenue bonds issued in anticipation of the collection of taxes, which are not retired within five years after their date of issue, and bonds issued to provide for the supply of water, and any debt hereafter incurred by any portion or part of a city, if there shall be any such debt, shall be included in ascertaining the power of the city to become otherwise indebted; except that debts incurred by the city of New York after the first day of January, nineteen hundred and four, to provide for the supply of water shall not be so included. Whenever the boundaries of any city are the same as those of a county, or when any city shall include within its boundaries more than one county, the power of any county wholly included within such city to become indebted shall cease, but the debt of the county, heretofore existing, shall not, for the purposes of this section, be reckoned as a part of the city debt. The amount hereafter to be raised by tax for county or city purposes, in any county containing a city of over one hundred thousand inhabitants, or any such city of this state, in addition to providing for the principal and interest of existing debt, shall not in the aggregate exceed in any one year two per centum of the assessed valuation of the real and personal estate of such county or city, to be ascertained as prescribed in this section in respect to county or city debt. § 2. Resolved (if the assembly concur), that the foregoing amendment be submitted to the people for approval at the general election to be held in the year nineteen hundred and five in accordance with the provisions of the election law.

ways made by the committee on salaries of their own volition.

Toward the close of the session Mr McCurdy made the startling statemen that an insurance company was no an institution founded to make money for the policy holders, but was, o should be, a great philanthropic enterprise founded to increase and spread its benefits over the entire earth.

"There has been a great mistak made," he said, "about the real prov ince of life insurance companies i these latter years. People have been led to believe that the main purpose was to make money for its policy holders. In my view, that is not the purpose of such companies. They are eleemosynary. When a man insures in a company he should take into consideration the fact that he has entered a great philanthropic concern that is in duty bound to spread itself even though this growth prevents him from realizing as much as he expected."

It was brought out that the witness and Dr. Gillette held enough proxies of policy holders to control the board of trustees by electing its members.

Students Must Have High Ideals.

Whatever the student's bent, whatever his ultimate intention in the way of practice may be, the same simple rules will hold good. He must be earnest in his desire to learn, and he must never be contented with partially understanding. He must be methodical, working according to a plan and ready to sacrifice his personal pleasures and comforts to carry out that plan. And he must keep before him a high ideal of his professional duties, ever remembering that his mission is to prevent disease and heal the sick. He has joined an altruistic profession, one where the rewards are often incommensurate altogether with the labors, but one where his power of doing good if thoroughly and intelligently exerted will be greater than it would be in any other walk of life.—London Lancet.

Working Horn.

It is often the case that amateurs would like to make some use of handsome horns, but from the rigid and obstinate nature of the material are unable to do so. A simple process carefully followed out would enable any one to make beautiful and useful articles. The inner part of the horn is scraped out, then it is thrown into water and boiled for an hour or so, when it becomes soft. It is then held in the flame of a wood or coal fire, being constantly turned. It should be kept in the fire for some time, care being taken that it does not burn, and is frequently moistened by being dipped in boiling water. The heat and steam will soften it to about the condition of molten lead. It is therefore very soft and can be split lengthwise by a strong knife and pinchers. It can then be cut into thin layers by separating the sheets of which it is composed. By being pressed between dies it can be made to take almost any form. When the article is complete it can be scraped smooth, then given a high polish.

Hats on In Church.

Pepys shows that in the seventeenth century both men and women wore their hats to worship. "To church," he writes, "and heard a simple fellow open the praise of church musique and exclaiming against men wearing their hats on in the church." Later he notes that he saw a minister "preach with his hat off, which I never saw before." The hat was then an integral part of both male and female costume, and Pepys catches "a strange cold in my head by flinging off my hat at dinner."

Except the debts specified in sections two and three of this article, no debts shall be hereafter contracted by or in behalf of this state, unless such debt shall be authorized by a law, for some single work or object, to be distinctly specified therein; and such law shall impose and provide for the collection of a direct annual tax to pay, and sufficient to pay, the interest on such debt as it falls due, and also to pay and discharge the principal of such debt within fifty years from the time of the contracting thereof. How a Great Actor Lived.

Charles Mathews, one day previous to the period of his publicly proclaimed dire bankruptcy, invited a friend to dine with him. The walnuts were washed down by some rare sherry. "That's a delicious wine," his friend exclaimed. "It must have cost you a lot of money." "It didn't cost me anything that I know of," the flighty comedian answered, with a shrug. "You had it given to you, then?" the friend suggested. "Oh, no," answered Mathews; "I bought it from Ellis, in Bond street." "But he will charge you something for it?" the friend exclaimed in astonishment. "I believe he does write something down in a book," Charles retorted gravely. "Let's have another glass, my boy."

In later years when the same publishers asked him for one of his manuscripts he politely requested them to refer to their previous correspondence with him marked "396b."

AMENDMENT NUMBER SEVEN.

Concurrent Resolution of the Senate and Assembly, proposing an amendment to section two of article six of the constitution in relation to justices of the appellate division of the supreme court. Whereas, The legislature at its regular session in nineteen hundred and four duly adopted a resolution, proposing an amendment to section two of article six of the constitution, in relation to justices of the appellate division of the supreme court; and Whereas, Such resolution has been duly published in accordance with law and the constitution, and referred to this legislature for action; therefore: Section 1. Resolved (if the assembly concur), That section two of article six of the constitution be amended to read as follows: Article VI. § 2. The legislature shall divide the state into four judicial departments. The first department shall consist of the county of New York; the others shall be bounded by county lines, and be compact and equal in population as nearly as may be. Once every ten years the legislature may alter the judicial departments, but without increasing the number thereof. There shall be an appellate division of the supreme court, consisting of seven justices in the first department, and of five justices in each of the other departments. In each department four shall constitute a quorum, and the concurrence of three shall be necessary to a decision. No more than five justices shall sit in any case. From all the justices elected to the supreme court the governor shall designate those who shall constitute the appellate division in each department; and he shall designate the presiding justice thereof, who shall act as such during his term of office, and shall be a resident of the department. The other justices shall be designated for terms of five years or the unexpired portions of their respective terms of office, if less than five years. From time to time as the terms of such designations expire, or vacancies occur, he shall make new designations. A majority of the justices so designated to sit in the appellate division, in each department shall be residents of the department. He may also make temporary designations in case of the absence or inability to act of any justice in the appellate division, or in case the presiding justice of any appellate division shall certify to him that one or more additional justices are needed for the speedy disposition of the business before it. Whenever the appellate division in any department shall be unable to dispose of its business within a reasonable time, a majority of the presiding justices of the several departments at a meeting called by the presiding justice of the department in arrears may transfer any pending appeals from such department to any other department for hearing and determination. No justice of the appellate division shall, within the department to which he may be designated to perform the duties of an appellate justice, exercise any of the powers of a justice of the supreme court, other than those of a justice out of court, and those pertaining to the appellate division, or to the hearing and decision of motions submitted by consent of counsel, but any such justice, when not actually engaged in performing the duties of such appellate justice in the department to which he is designated, may hold any term of the supreme court and exercise any of the powers of a justice of the supreme court in any county or judicial district in any other department of the state. From and after the last day of December, eighteen hundred and ninety-five, the appellate division shall have the jurisdiction now exercised by the supreme court at its general terms and by the general terms of the court of common pleas for the city and county of New York, the superior court of the city of New York, the superior court of Buffalo and the city of Brooklyn, and such additional jurisdiction as may be conferred by the legislature. It shall have power to appoint and remove a reporter. The justices of the appellate division in each department shall have power to fix the times and places for holding special terms therein, and to assign the justices in the departments to hold such terms; or to make rules therefor. § 2. Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the foregoing amendment be submitted to the people for approval at the general election to be held in the year nineteen hundred and five in accordance with the provisions of the election law.

Habit In Appetite.

The so called cravings of appetite are purely the result of habit. A habit once acquired and persistently followed soon has us in its grasp, and then any deviation therefrom temporarily disturbs our physiological equilibrium. The system makes complaint, and we experience a craving, it may be, for that to which the body has become accustomed, even though this something be in the long run distinctly injurious to the welfare of the body. There has thus come about a sentiment that the cravings of the appetite for food are to be fully satisfied, that this is merely obedience to nature's laws. This idea, however, is fundamentally wrong. Any one with a little persistence can change his or her habits of life, change the whole order of cravings, thus demonstrating that the latter are purely artificial and that they have no necessary connection with the welfare or needs of the body. In other words, dietetic requirements are to be founded not upon so called instinct and craving, but upon reason and intelligence.—Russell H. Chittenden in Century.

The Practical Joker.

See the practical joker. He is not much of a sight, but still he is worth looking at as a curiosity, as a study in uncommon cussedness. The practical joker is the offspring of asininity run to seed. He is what was left over after the rest of the world was created. There was a slight surplus, a mere fraction, not enough to make a complete man, so the scraps were scraped up, pressed together and molded into a practical joker. The job was not patented. Nobody thinks enough of the invention to patent it. You couldn't sell practical jokers for 3 cents a bunch if you should stand out on the corner and spiel till your vocal cords got tied into double bowknots. The public is aware of the shell game when it sees the layout. The practical joker is an escaped idiot from the Idiotville asylum, but he is by no means a harmless idiot. When recognized, he should be roped forthwith and hauled back to his native and natural environment, the padded cell.—Portland Oregonian.

THE GAME OF LIFE.

Your Own Resolution, and Not Fate, Deals the Cards.

Many a man has tried to justify his failure on the ground that he was doomed by the cards which fate dealt him, that he must pick them up and play the game and that no effort, however great, on his part could materially change the result. But, my young friend, the fate that deals your cards is in the main your own resolution. The result of the game does not rest with fate or destiny, but with you. You will take the trick if you have the superior energy, ability and determination requisite to take it. You have the power within yourself to change the value of the cards which, you say, fate has dealt you. The game depends upon your training, upon the way you are disciplined to seize and use your opportunities and upon your ability to put grit in the place of superior advantages.

Just because circumstances do sometimes give clients to lawyers and patients to physicians, put commonplace clergymen in uncommon pulpits and place the sons of the rich at the head of great corporations even when they have only average ability and scarcely any experience, while poor youths with greater ability and more experience often have to fight their way for years to obtain ordinary situations, are you justified in starting out without a chart or in leaving a place for luck in your programme? What would you think of the captain of a great liner who would start out to sea without any port in view and trust to luck to land his precious cargo safely?

Did you ever know of a strong young man making out his life programme and depending upon chance to carry out any part of it? Men who depend upon "luck" do not think it worth while to make a thorough preparation for success. They are not willing to pay the regular price for it. They are looking for bargains. They are hunting for short cuts to success.

Power gravitates to the man who knows how. "Luck is the tide, nothing more. The strong man rows with it if it makes toward his port. He rows against it if it flows the other way."—Success.

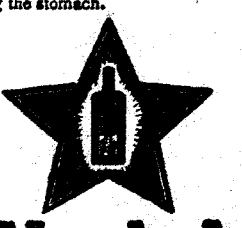
How John Hay Regarded Critics.



John Hay was chatting about his literary experiences with an intimate friend when the latter asked:

"John, what feature or phase of this writing business has impressed you the most?"

"Well," was the reply, and the speaker's eyes twinkled mischievously, "so far as I am concerned, it's the things that the critics fish out of a fellow's printed stuff that he never put there. But I suppose that critics, like the rest of us, have to show excuses for living."—Success Magazine.

Judgment

A good cook uses common sense in the buying of meats—you can't fool her if you try to. We won't make the attempt, because we want to please her in every respect. Ask the cooks in your neighborhood if our meats and poultry come up to her ideas of right thing for pot, pan, oven and grill. If they say "No," pass us up; if they say "Yes" we're entitled to your consideration.

Men In Petticoats.

One of the medical papers has been discussing the Connemara custom of dressing grown up boys in petticoats and does not seem to be aware that it is merely a survival of what was once the general practice in Ireland. Half a century ago young men of nineteen might be seen—and were seen—within thirty miles of Dublin courting in petticoats in the country lanes. These were worn with high waists and long skirts reaching almost to the ankles, and a Holland overall resembling an English countryman's smock completed the costume. But there was no difficulty in distinguishing the sexes by their dress. The man's waist was right under his armpits, while the woman's was in the usual place. When they walked out together they resembled a couple of figures from the Noah's ark of the toy shop, a proof of the real antiquity of the costume.—London Tatler.

Chinese Porcelain.

Chinamen have been exporting their porcelain to the west for at least a thousand years and probably longer. Mediaeval Europe could make nothing like porcelain and therefore regarded it as a magical product endowed with uncanny powers. It was said, for instance, that a porcelain cup would break if poison were poured into it. Travelers declared that porcelain was composed of various substances, which, after being tempered, were hidden in the ground for ages before being fit for use. Even so erudite a man as Sir Thomas Browne, writing in the later seventeenth century, was "not thoroughly resolved, concerning porcellane or china dishes, that according to common belief they are made of earth." The secret of the true Chinese porcelain was first discovered in Europe a generation later by the German chemist Bottger, the inventor of what is now known as Dresden china.

Writing a Letter.

A letter is written conversation and should be simple, cordial and with a flavor of personality, like a chat with a friend.

When discouraged, sick or sad do not write. A letter carries atmosphere. Never write anything over your signature of which you might later be ashamed. Write kindly of every one. Letters are like debts—harder to pay when overdue. Read over your friend's letter just before beginning your reply and then answer it. Out of the heart letters are the most welcome.

Use plain, unruled stationery, folding once to fit the envelope—white, cream white, gray or gray blue of good quality. Men of taste use only white paper.

Avoid eccentric shapes and colors, monograms or heraldic devices of unusual size and anything conspicuously

People Who Are Talked About

SENATOR PATTERSON.

THOMAS M. PATTERSON of Colorado, who succeeded the late Edward O. Wolcott in the United States senate, was one of the members of the Taft Philippine party and is of the opinion that the gulf between natives and Americans is widening in the islands rather than decreasing. "I am convinced," he says, "that we are getting further and further away from Secretary Taft's patriotic and humane policy—the Philippines for the Filipinos and ultimate independence."

Senator Patterson once had as a client an odd character, who always wore a Prince Albert coat, no matter what work he was engaged in. This client, who was named Burns, chanced to strike a rich vein of ore and named it the Prince Albert. Being of a generous and convivial disposition, he was surrounded by many self seeking friends. When he and they were in their cups some of them, with an eye to the main chance, managed to wheedle shares in the mine out of him. With royal prodigality he scattered deeds about among his retainers and camp followers until finally something had to be done, and the case was taken into court. Senator Patterson had Burns on the stand. "Now, Mr. Burns," said he, "will you please tell the court how you can explain your conduct? The evidence shows that you have deeded away twenty-nine twenty-fourths of your mine. What have you to say to that?" "Well, Misther Patterson," replied the witness, "you must remember, sor, that the Prince Albert is a very large mine."

"Man and Superman," George Bernard Shaw's new work, has been much criticised in this country on moral grounds. In the free public libraries of New York instructions have been given not to offer it to the reading public and only to furnish it on application. But Mr. Shaw is used to criticism of his ideas and thrives on it. When he heard that "Man and Superman" had been eyed askance in the United States he attributed it to "Comstockery," said America was provincial anyway and added, "I can promise the Comstockers that, startling as 'Man and Superman' may appear to them, it is the merest Sunday school tract compared with my later play, 'Major Barbara,' with which they will presently be confronted."

Mr. Shaw, who once declared that he could write better plays than Shakespeare's, is the author of "Arms and the Man," which was prohibited in Austria on account of alleged revolutionary tendencies. This play was produced in New York by Richard Mansfield. "Man and Superman" is now running at a New York theater. Mr. Shaw is in his fiftieth year, and, though it is said his beliefs have changed somewhat in regard to conventional institutions since his young manhood, he is still the apostle of heterodoxy and cynicism. In his early days in London he was known especially for his ardor in behalf of socialism. Later in his career Shaw married a rich widow, and one of his Socialist friends on meeting him said: "Mr. Shaw, I congratulate you. You can now sell all that you have—now you have something to sell—and give to the poor."

GEORGE BERNARD SHAW.

"Not at all," returned Shaw. "I don't practice socialism; I preach it."

An American clipping agency recently received the following characteristic note from Mr. Shaw:

Derry Rosscarbery, County Cork,
18th September, 1905.

Gentlemen—The view of my order expressed in your letter of the 7th September is correct.

At the end of the year I shall probably ask you to change our arrangement to one whereby I shall pay 5 cents for every cutting you do not send me.

For heaven's sake, don't be too diligent. Consider your health; take it easy.

G. BERNARD SHAW.

Jacob H. Schiff, the New York banker who as a director of the Equitable Life Assurance society testified regarding its operations before the Armstrong investigating committee, recently received a decoration from the emperor of Japan. In recognition of his services in connection with the flotation of the Japanese war loans the mikado conferred upon Mr. Schiff the Order of the Sanctified Treasurer of the second class. There are eight classes in the order, and that awarded Mr. Schiff is the highest that may be conferred upon a person not a native of Japan.

JACOB H. SCHIFF.

Mr. Schiff is regarded as one of the ablest financiers of his time, and his wealth is estimated at over $50,000,000. His philanthropy has won him the title of "the Montefiore of New York." Mr. Schiff was born in Frankfort-on-the-Main in 1847 and came to the United States at eighteen. His connection with the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., of which he is now head, came through a romance. He married a daughter of Solomon Loeb, former head of the firm. Mr. Schiff has given $400,000 to Harvard, $100,000 to Columbia and other large sums to various educational and benevolent enterprises. At the insurance investigation Mr. Schiff declared that as great corporations are now run directors do not direct.

Musical circles are especially interested in the announcement of an engagement between the pianist, Josef Hofmann, who used to be known as a boy phenomenon, and Mrs. Marie Eustis, daughter of James Eustis, former ambassador to France. Mrs. Eustis married a cousin, George Peabody Eustis, but several years ago obtained a divorce from him. She is a member of the fashionable colony at Westbury, N. Y., where she has a residence known as Phoenix Lodge, and is prominent in the society of Newport in the summer and at Aiken, S. C., in the winter season. She is a devotee of music and in this way became acquainted with the brilliant musician who is to become her husband.

JOSEF HOFMANN.

Young Hofmann was a pretty little boy ten years old when he first created a furore in New York. That was in 1887. He was accompanied on the tour of America which he made at that time by his father, Casimer Hofmann, a conductor of opera in Warsaw, Poland. Even at eight years old the boy had attracted the attention of Anton Rubinstein, who believed him to be one of the musical marvels of the age. When they heard him eighteen years ago many predicted that Hofmann would never come to musical maturity, so precocious did his talents seem, but he has disappointed such expectations. Besides being one of the greatest pianists of his time Hofmann has remarkable genius as an electrician and mechanician. He has patented several inventions and has built automobiles with his own hands. As a boy he had an ambition to marry a princess. The lady he has chosen for his bride has no title, but is regarded as an exceptionally clever and attractive woman.

Senator Redfield Proctor of Vermont, who will build and endow a sanitarium for consumptives in the Green Mountain State, was secretary of war under Benjamin Harrison. He is not counted very rich as wealth is estimated nowadays, but he proposes to give $150,000 for the construction and endowment of the sanitarium. Senator Proctor made most of his money out of marble quarries in his native state. He and ex-Representative Lewis of Washington were engaged in conversation one time when Colonel Lewis said:

SENATOR PROCTOR.

"Senator, is it true that some enterprising fellow citizens of yours have sold pieces of marble from your quarries for Vermont maple sugar?"

Senator Proctor laughed at this remark and came back at the effervescent Lewis with the following:

"You remind me of an incident that happened on a railroad train some time ago. The Pullman conductor rushed into the smoker yelling, 'Any of you passengers from Maine or Vermont?' when up jumped a tall Yankee, inspired by the thought that some occasion for his patriotism had arisen. 'Yes,' said he; 'I be from Vermont.'

"'Well, then, come back here in the Pullman car,' said the conductor. 'There's a lady who's got her spruce gum and maple sugar mixed up and wants some one to help her pick it out!'"

Colonel John Jacob Astor is unlike his cousin, William Waldorf Astor, in being a stanch American. It was recently announced that he had abandoned his plan to have his only son, Vincent, educated at Eton, where the boy was placed last spring, and had resolved to have him enter an American school so as to grow to manhood wholly under the influence of American ideas. This young scion of the famous Astor house will therefore study henceforth in surroundings which his father hopes will aid him in becoming a useful and patriotic citizen of the United States.

Colonel Astor is himself a graduate of an American college, Harvard, and he evinced his patriotism in the late war with Spain by entering the army. He served under General Shafter at Santiago and equipped and presented a mountain battery to the government. He has a manly figure, being over six feet in height, and married a Philadelphia beauty, Miss Ava Willing.

COLONEL JOHN JACOB ASTOR.

JACOB H. SCHIFF.

Mr. Astor was once called upon for a speech at a dinner and talked about Niagara. "Every one who goes to Niagara," he said, "hears some absurd, ridiculous and inapt remark there. The day I first saw Niagara a man touched my arm as I looked up at those white waters. I turned to the man. He had the silly and vacuous smile of the confirmed joker.

"'It seems a shame,' he said, 'to see all this going to waste.'

"'What are you?' said I, 'an electrical engineer?'

"'No,' he answered; 'a milkman.'"

America's Alice In Wonderland

"PRINCESS ALICE" was the title the orientals gave the daughter of President Roosevelt on her tour in the far east in the company of Secretary Taft. Had she been in reality a princess no greater honors could have been heaped upon her than were bestowed by the yellow races of the Asiatic coast in token of admiration for the American republic which Miss Roosevelt so happily represented. Her whole trip was a series of ovations, and Hawaiians, Japanese Filipinos, Chinese and Koreans vied in doing honor to the clever, high spirited democratic and unaffected girl.

Miss Roosevelt's adventures began in Honolulu, where she spent a day seeing volcanoes, canoeing in the surf and witnessing the fetes arranged by the Hawaiians in celebration of her visit. At Tokyo she was the center of scenes the like of which were never witnessed in the Japanese capital before. All kinds of functions were given in her honor. She dined with the imperial family, and there was a brilliant reception at the palace, the occasion being signalized by the opening of the imperial gardens for the entertainment of Miss Roosevelt and her party, a proceeding absolutely without precedent in the annals of Japan. On the streets of Tokyo there were scenes of a remarkable character, and the enthusiasm manifested was second only to that shown on the homecoming of Admiral Togo after the great victory of the sea of Japan. At Manila and in other parts of the Philippines there were fetes galore. The sultan of Sulu gallantly offered to make Miss Alice his suitaness, at Peking the dowager empress gave an audience to her and entertained her overnight in the summer palace, while in Korea the quaint people of the Hermit Nation exhausted their strange vocabulary in the effort to find adjectives fit to describe the virtues of the "white princess" from America.

Nor was romance lacking on the trip. The manly, handsome, rich and accomplished young congressman from Ohio, Nicholas Longworth, was ever at Miss Roosevelt's side, and, though no engagement has been announced between him and the president's daughter, he was regarded by the members of the party as her chosen defender. Once he saved her from a fall from her horse while they were descending a steep declivity in the Philippines. He showed no signs of jealousy when his majesty the sultan of Sulu offered her a seat on a throne, and but once on the tour was he slow to respond to his fair companion's slightest wish. That was one day just after the steamer had left Nagasaki for Manila. The morning was hot, and a large canvas bathing tank that had been erected on deck for the convenience of the Taft party looked very inviting.

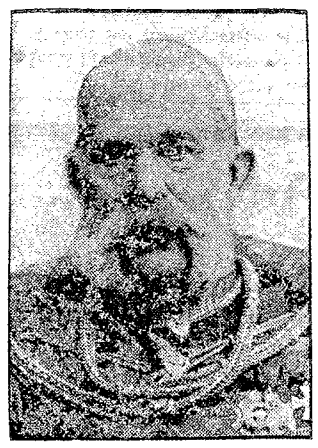
MISS ALICE ROOSEVELT.

"Congressman Longworth," said Miss Roosevelt suddenly, "if you will take a plunge, dressed as you are, I will follow suit."

Mr. Longworth looked at the water, looked at his clothes and shrugged his shoulders by way of objection. "Well, if you don't dare I do," declared the impulsive girl, and before any one could remonstrate in she went, with a merry laugh and a loud splash, and swam around the tank. Mr. Longworth then sprang in after her, and they had a refreshing bath at the expense of wet clothing.

Miss Roosevelt nearly started a tribal war by accepting a present from a rival of the sultan of Sulu when the party was at Malabang. The tribesmen had given an exhibition of sports and games, and the sultan had presented his fair guest of honor with some finely embossed bolos, spears and creeses, which were received with suitable expressions of pleasure. Then came Jokanim, a rival chieftain, and with much ceremony offered a string of pearls as his gift. It so delighted the president's daughter that she danced away to show it to her friends. The sultan fairly snarled at his rival and strode to Miss Roosevelt, made a low obeisance and, tearing from his finger a matchless pearl set in a ring, presented it to her. "Princess Alice's" smiles brushed away his rage at his rival, and hostilities were happily averted.

Kossuth and Austro-Hungary



FRANCIS KOSSUTH.

ALITTLE more than a half century ago Louis Kossuth was one of the most prominent figures in the public eye as the foremost champion of the liberties of Hungarians. Now Hungary again is writhing in the throes of a movement for greater liberty or possible independence, and again a Kossuth is hailed as leader. He is Francis Kossuth, son of the patriot who pleaded the cause of his countrymen so eloquently some fifty years ago. Then as now it was the Emperor Francis Joseph with whom the advocates of Hungary's rights had to reckon. The elder Kossuth was governor of Hungary during the brief period of its independence in 1849, but on the failure of the movement he led was for many years in exile. In 1851 occurred his famous visit to the United States.

About three years ago Francis Kossuth visited the United States to unveil a monument to his father and was the recipient of many attentions which recalled to old inhabitants the similar honors bestowed upon his sire in days gone by.

Louis Kossuth died in 1894 in Italy. He had lived in that country during the later years of his life, although by the amnesty of 1867 he might have returned to his native land. Francis Kossuth was a civil engineer in Italy when the call came to him soon after his father's death to go to Hungary, take a seat in the Hungarian parliament and lead the party which the elder Kossuth had once led. He responded to the call, gave up his Italian citizenship and on arrival in Bucharest was the recipient of many honors. In outlining the policy upon which he had determined he said he would hold fast to his father's principles, but would seek another way toward their realization. He declared in favor of working for the economic independence of Hungary through peaceable means, expressed his admiration for the Emperor Francis Joseph and avowed his belief that the foundation for the latter's authority over Hungary would be more secure were the independence of that kingdom from Austria in all matters of administration recognized.

EMPEROR FRANCIS JOSEPH.

The relations existing between Austria and Hungary are peculiar. The two countries constitute a joint monarchy, and Francis Joseph I., who is now seventy-five years of age, is emperor of Austria and apostolic king of Hungary. He became emperor of Austria in 1848 and was crowned king of Hungary in 1867. The two states united under this rulership have their separate constitutions and parliaments, and each has for most branches of state affairs its own ministry and administration, but they are closely bound together by the identity of the ruler and by a permanent constitutional union which, upon the common principle of possession and defense, was first proclaimed by the pragmatic sanction of 1723 and has since been regulated by the so called "compromise" of 1867.

In accordance with the constitutional union, foreign affairs and the greater part of war affairs and finances relating to them are dealt with by common ministries. The control of these ministries and the voting of the common budget are exercised by delegations chosen from the parliaments of the two countries. The proportion of expenses to be borne by each state is fixed by agreements, which are renewable at the expiration of certain periods.

For some time there has been discontent in Hungary because of a belief that the rights of that state under the agreements forming the basis of union between it and Austria were being infringed upon. The Hungarian parties which have formed a coalition under the leadership of Kossuth demand reform of the electoral law and future universal suffrage, separation of Austrian and Hungarian customs and introduction of the Hungarian language and flag in the army, as contemplated in the "compromise" of 1867. It is reported that the emperor has agreed to reforms in the electoral laws in the direction of universal suffrage. Whether he will make concessions in other respects sufficient to stay the impending storm remains to be seen.

The Dinner Party.

That the success of a dinner party does not depend on the excellence of the chef, but on the proper assortment of the company, was precisely the opinion of a very witty old lady, who wisely said, "My dear, it isn't the menu that makes a good dinner; it's the men you sit next to."

Gilbert F. Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., makes public the following letter from one of the most prominent men in Utica, N.Y., but who does not wish his name used publicly:

My Dear Sir: I received a sample bottle of Dr. Kennedy's new medicine, Cal-cura Solvent, a few months ago. I was greatly pleased with it, and decided to try a large bottle. I therefore purchased three bottles of Mr. Sheehan, and I am pleased to inform you that I have been greatly benefited by it and consider myself cured. If my kidney trouble ever asserts itself again (and I am sure it will not) I will not hesitate to continue the use of this grand medicine. I wish you would send some samples to the parties on the enclosed list. All are suffering from kidney trouble. Yours very truly,

The Horse as a Jumper.

A horse can certainly jump higher than a man. There is at least one authentic case of a hunter clearing a seven foot paling, and a century or so ago a Mr. Bingham leaped his horse over the wall of Hyde park, which was six and one-half feet high on the inside and eight feet on the outside. The horse cleared this obstacle twice in rapid succession, and we are quite certain that no man who has ever lived could do it.—London Answers.

Work and Talk.

Generally speaking, it is true of women as of men that those who think most say least. Woman's talkativeness is the result of her sedentary occupation. Tailors, shoemakers and weavers—all men who sit close at their work—have, in common with women, not only hypochondriacal fancies, but also a tendency to great talkativeness.—Richter.

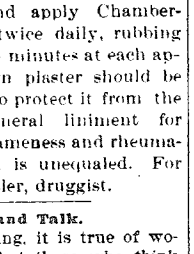
The Word Cigar.



The word cigar occurs in a German dictionary for the first time in 1813 and in the Dictionnaire of the French Academie in 1835. Kant used the word "ziggaro" in 1798. In Spain at the present day the word "cigarro" means a cigarette, for which the Spaniards have the word "pitillos." Their name for a cigar is "un puro."

Dinner In a Bell.

In the tower of Erfurt cathedral hangs a huge bell ten feet high and thirty feet in circumference, weighing thirteen tons. Within this in July, 1713, dined ten of the town's most opulent burghers on dishes cooked in a kitchen temporarily erected on the beam that supported the ponderous mass of tintinnabulary metal. To celebrate this repast medals were struck, having on the obverse the portraits of the guests and on the reverse the representation of the curious scene.

Colophon.

Colophon was a city of ancient Ionia, nine miles north of Ephesus, and near the sea. It was said to be the birthplace of Homer, and near it was a famous oracle of Apollo. The Greek proverb, "To put a colophon to it," meaning to end an affair handsomely, is explained by Strabo as arising from a belief that the cavalry of Colophon was so excellent in quality that their charge was always decisive in a battle. Hence arose the custom of calling any device or monogram or printer's name or sign or date of printing in old printed books a colophon in the sense of a definite, satisfactory end.

Tycho Brahe.

It was the great eclipse of Aug. 21, 1560, that turned Tycho Brahe into an astronomer. He was in his fourteenth year at the time, a Danish boy of noble origin, and had been destined first for the army and then for the law. But the accuracy with which the eclipse was predicted impressed him with the belief that astronomy was a divine thing, and thenceforward he devoted his life to it. The debt of astronomy to Tycho Brahe not only for his own work, but as the man who shaped the genius of Kepler, can scarcely be overestimated.

Are Large Houses Vulgar?

Are large houses vulgar? Certainly a parvenu who should build himself a house the size of Chatsworth or Raby would be vulgar, as lacking a sense of proportion in a matter of taste. The inheritors of such places are of course not vulgar to live in them, though they are sometimes most unfortunate. Enormous houses survive the time of necessary retainers and a warlike state. They are useless for all modern purposes except display; pathetic, then, when old, they are certainly vulgar when new.—G. S. Street in London Outlook.

A well known traveling man who visits the drug trade says he has often heard druggists inquire of customers who asked for a cough medicine, whether it was wanted for a child or an adult, and if for a child they almost invariably recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. There is not the least danger in giving it, and for coughs, colds and croup, it is unsurpassed For sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Snakes.

Snakes have their usefulness in the world. They are the scavengers of swamps and morasses where other animals of size are unable to penetrate or to exist. It is in the tropics of course that serpents chiefly abound. All snakes are of tropical origin, but some species have spread into cooler latitudes. In very cold countries there are no snakes. Contrary to the popular belief, there are some snakes in Ireland, but they are very rare. The smallest serpents in the world are the "worm snakes" of the tropics. They are about as big as fair sized earthworms. Some snakes lay eggs, while others bring forth their young alive. In the latter category are vipers, rattlesnakes and nearly all water snakes. Pythons incubate their eggs after laying them.

Placid Hindoo Servants.

Hindoo servants are the most imperturbable people in the world. You may throw one downstairs or pat him on the back. He accepts both with exactly the same expression of countenance. The Indian's religion is at the bottom of all his acts, all his feelings. He eats, sleeps, moves and has his being according to religious formula, and his doctrine of reincarnation forms his whole philosophy of life. The fact that you are the master now is due to the fact that you have been the servant in some previous reincarnation. He is the servant now, and the only chance for him to be reborn in the master's position is to learn all the lessons of his present incarnation. He takes everything philosophically. It is all a part of the day's work.

A Blow From a Lion's Paw.

A man entered a London theater in the early morning and found to his horror that four lions, which were housed there, had broken from their cage. One gave him a blow with its paw, then took him in its mouth. The blow from a lion's paw is said to be, after the stroke of a whale's tail and the kick of a giraffe, the strongest thing in nature, so that the victim was dead when the keeper went to the rescue. Only one lion had concerned itself with the man and was now sitting over him as a dog sits over a bone. Two of the lions were playing on the stage with a "property" garland, and the fourth was seated in the royal box, placidly surveying the gambols on the stage and the terrible banquet in the auditorium. The murderer relinquished its prey immediately its master appeared, and all four bolted for their den like children detected in some misconduct.—St. James' Gazette.

WILLIAM R. HEARST.

The Newspaper Owner Named For Mayor of New York.

William Randolph Hearst, who was named for mayor of New York on a municipal ownership platform, has long advocated in his different newspapers the public ownership of public utilities. Mr. Hearst has had remarkable success as a journalist, is a member of congress and in 1904 was a leading candidate for the Democratic nomination for president of the United States. He was born in San Francisco in 1863 and is a son of the late United States Senator George F. Hearst. His mother, Mrs. Phebe A. Hearst, is widely known and esteemed for her acts of beneficence. Mr. Hearst attended the public schools of San Francisco and went to Harvard college. In 1886 he became proprietor of the San Francisco Examiner, and in 1896 he invaded the field of eastern journalism and acquired control of the New York Journal.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

now called the American. The following year he established the New York Evening Journal. In 1900 he founded the Chicago American.

He has since acquired other newspaper properties, so that the chain of journals owned by him extends from Boston to Los Angeles. Mr. Hearst represents in congress the Eleventh New York district, having been first elected in 1903 and re-elected last year.

A newspaper man of Mr. Hearst's acquaintance related in Harper's Weekly an anecdote which illustrates the energy and enterprise characteristic of the man. About 2 o'clock on one of the hottest nights of the summer of 1899 a young man ran with reckless speed down the middle of Park row.

He carried a straw hat in one hand and an open newspaper in the other and was seemingly oblivious of disparaging comment. Up the steps of the Tribune building he bounded three steps at a time and disappeared. It was William R. Hearst. Reading his own newspaper on the way home from the office, he had found something he did not like. Though a multimillionaire, he had no time to waste on street cars or cabs. He got to the office as fast as his own legs could carry him and stopped the presses until the error could be corrected.

ROBERT H. M'CURDY.

His Career In Life Insurance and His Large Income.

Robert H. McCurdy, who testified recently before the life insurance investigating committee of the New York legislature, has made a good thing of the life insurance business, according to facts brought out in the course of this investigation. Mr. McCurdy is the son of the president of the Mutual Life Insurance company, Richard H. McCurdy, and is forty-five years of age. He graduated from college in 1881 and after six months spent in travel entered the office of Charles H. Raymond, general agent for the Mutual in the metropolitan district. During his first year he received a salary of $1,000.

ROBERT H. M'CURDY.

After a time he became a partner in the firm of Raymond & Co., with a half interest in the business. In 1886 he was sent abroad to organize the foreign business of the Mutual Life. In 1889 his total income from Raymond & Co. and from commissions on the foreign business of the Mutual amounted to $83,294. His annual receipts from the same sources increased until in 1896 his income was $127,526. Since that year Mr. McCurdy's yearly revenues have been somewhat less than the above figure, but have usually been over $100,000. He is now general manager of the company. His father, as its president, receives the enormous sum of $150,000 per year.

THE K. B. BROKERAGE CO.

WORLD KNOWN BARGAIN GIVERS

WILL OPEN ONE OF THEIR STORES AT

NO. 55 SOUTH FIRST STREET, FULTON and establish a store under a new system of doing business

The K. B. Brokerage Company is one of the largest of its kind in the country, making a specialty of paying spot cash for all stores, stocks of merchandise of all descriptions, in any amount, of people who are hard up, manufacturers who are overloaded, and hundreds of other instances where people have got to sell.

NO MAN OR STORE CAN COMPETE WITH US!

As our goods are bought on a basis of one-half of actual cost of manufacture, and we can outsell those who have to pay one hundred cents on the dollar for their merchandise. We had the unusual good luck to secure the Hawkins-Illingsworth Co. stock, of North Adams, Mass., for 46 cents on the dollar, the entire value of the stock being $20,200,00. The Hawkins-Illingsworth Co. had been in business less than one year, and was forced to quit on account of the shutting down of the cotton industries of that section. This concern carried one of the best lines of goods, comprising the famous Kirshbaum Clothing for men and boys, Monarch and Seal Brand Shirts, Adler's Gloves, E. & W. Collars, Young's Hats, a very fine grade of Bath Robes and Smoking Jackets, a very fine line of Pants, and hundreds of other things too numerous to mention. As our other stores were over stocked, and as we are looking for good towns in which to locate and enlarge our output, we have moved this enormous stock to our present store, which we have leased, and will try and build up a business here, as we have done elsewhere. It will pay you to come one hundred miles to our opening.

We Have Come to Stay

And as the season is advancing and we want the people of Fulton and vicinity to know us, for the first month of our opening we will give such bargains as never were heard of in this part of the country. We guarantee every dollar's worth of goods we sell to be as represented or money refunded.

ONE PRICE TO ALL IS OUR MOTTO! Prices will be cut 25, 50 and 75 per cent. below the regular prices that you have to pay elsewhere. You will miss it if you do not attend this opening. It is one chance of a life time to buy good, honest, reliable merchandise at one-half its value. Our stock comprises MEN'S, BOY'S AND CHILDREN'S CLOTHING, OVERCOATS, ULSTERS, ODD PANTS, MEN'S, LADIES' AND CHILDREN'S UNDERWEAR. MEN'S AND LADIES' GLOVES AND MITTENS, MEN'S HATS AND CAPS, FURNISHING GOODS of all kinds and descriptions, DRY GOODS, LADIES' CLOAKS, MEN'S AND CHILDREN'S SHOES AND RUBBERS, LUMBERMEN'S SOCKS AND RUBBERS, in fact everything that constitutes a Clothing, Dry Goods and Shoe store combined. Remember, this will be the greatest opening of a new store and we are bound that every man, woman and child in this section shall know us at once, and we will start with the greatest bargains ever offered in this section. We will put forth such offerings that no matter what the weather conditions may be

ENVIABLE LEGISLATIVE RECORD.

HON. T. D. LEWIS.

The Hon. T. D. Lewis's record in the Assembly is one of which his constituents have every reason to be proud. Few men have accomplished so much during their tenure of office. He is ever alert regarding the wishes and desires of the people of his district, and possessing the rare faculty of making friends among his Legislative associates, he commands their confidence and secures their co-operation whenever that is needed to obtain required legislation for the First Assembly District of Oswego County.

Last year in this city Mr. Lewis polled six more votes than the Presidential electors. Make his majority this year greater than ever.

The following is a summary of measures that Mr. Lewis had to his credit when the session was brought to a close last Spring:

An appropriation of $11,500 for the raising of the Battle Island dam.

Oswego armory appropriation, $75,000.

Amending the poor law relative to the relief of soldiers. Passed both Houses.

The Guy R. Burleigh claim bill. Passed both Houses.

Relative to amendments of charters of domestic insurance corporations. A law.

Amending the insurance law relative to life and casualty insurance corporations upon the co-operative or assessment plan. A law.

Amending the insurance law relative to Lloyds associations. A law.

Providing for the incorporation of loan associations in counties containing an incorporated city. A law.

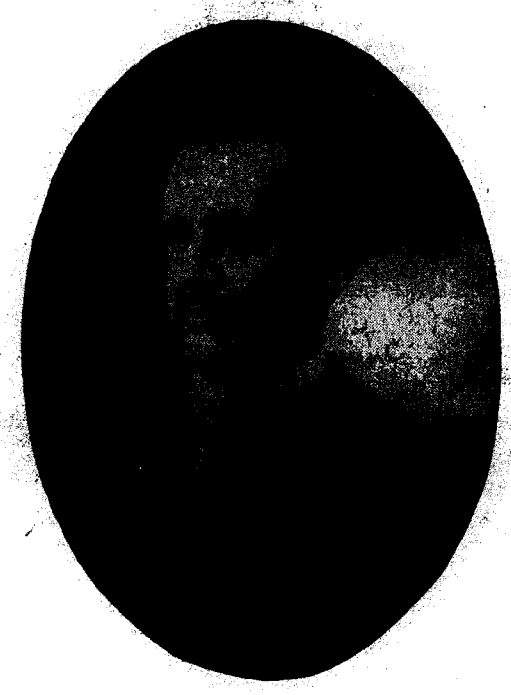
Providing for increasing the Oswego highway fund.

Authorizing Oswego to procure lands for hospital. A law.

Relative to funds for the Department of Public Works in Oswego.

Providing for the improvement of the breed of horses.

Oswego Department of Works bill.

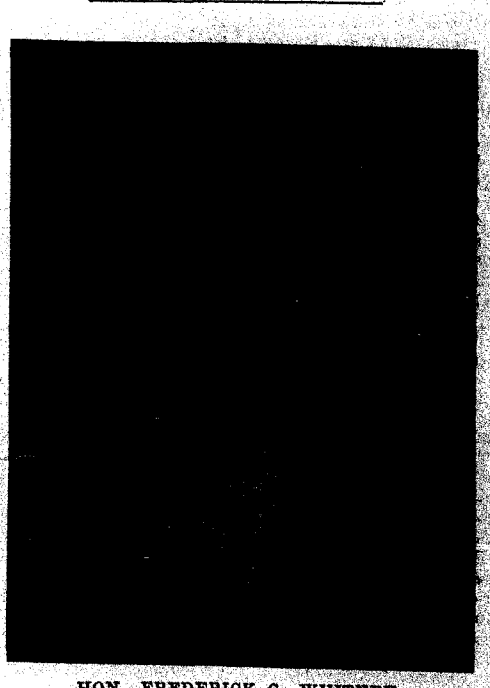


Amending insurance law relative to expense of management A law.

TO THE ELECTORS.
IMPORTANT PROPOSITION

A proposition will be submitted on election day, Nov. 7, authorizing the Board of Fire and Police Commissioners to increase the number of patrolmen from six to eight, whenever they deem it necessary for the peace and welfare of the city. This is in obedience to a mandate of the charter, which requires such a course to be pursued. The next municipal election will be two years hence, but in the meanwhile work will begin on the proposed Barge Canal, which will mean an increase of population of a class that may not reverence or respect the law. It is to guard against such a contingency that you are asked to vote "Yes" on the following proposition:

"Shall the number of patrolmen be increased to eight, said increase to be made when required by the Board of Fire and Police Commissioners?"



Vote YES!

DISTRICT ATTORNEY WILLIAM B. BAKER.

District Attorney William B. Baker has discharged the dnties of his office in a most capable manner and the Republican and Democratic electors, too, will honor him with a re-election by a very decided majority. Mr. Baker has conducted the district attorney's office without fear or favor and has deservedly won the confidence of all classes of citizens. As district attorney of this county his life has been strenuous, but he has proven equal to every emergency and his re-election will be a deserving recognition of meritorious services rendered.

CAPABLE AND ENERGETIC

HON. FREDERICK G. WHITNEY.

The Hon. Frederick G. Whitney, who is a candidate for re-election to the Assembly from the Second district, has also occupied a front rank in Legislative matters. His ability is unquestioned, and he has acquired the reputation of being painstaking and efficient in all matters pertaining to the best interests of his constituents. The following measures were introduced by him last Winter at Albany:

Oswego water supply bill. A law.

Amending the fish and game law relative to fishing in Lake Ontario.

Relative to appropriations by Town Boards for the observance of Memorial Day.

Providing for the completion of the State harbor at Constantia.

Amending the fish and game law pertaining to waters in Oswego County.

Establishing a law library in the Fifth Judicial district, to be located in the City of Oswego.

Amending the liquor tax law.

Amending the code of civil procedure relative to the issuing of transcripts.

Oswego office of recorder bill.

St. Francis Hospital (Oswego) bill.

Dr. Russell Declines Nomination.

Dr. S. A. Russell of this city has declined the Democratic nomination for Assembly in the First district because of the fact that when nominated he was a city official and the State Constitution makes him ineligible unless he resigned his city office at least 100 days prior to election. Thomas L. McKay of Oswego has been selected to fill vacancy on ticket.

Board of Fire and Police.

The Fire and Police Board at a meeting held on Monday evening, estimated the following amounts as necessary for expenditure next year: Police department, $6,070; Fire department, $6,350.

Behring's Cure For Consumption

Why He Desires to Keep It a Secret For a Year — Career of the German Physician—Discoverer of Diphtheria Antitoxin.

"IF the present knowledge concerning the means of preventing tuberculosis were generally applied, it is safe to say that tuberculosis would be stamped out of civilized countries within twenty-five years." So declared Dr. Lawrence F. Flick of Philadelphia, one of the American delegates to the international tuberculosis congress at Paris, at which Professor Emil von Behring announced his cure for tuberculosis. Dr. Flick lays more stress upon proper alimentation and plenty of open air and exercise in the cure of tuberculosis than he does upon a specific remedy for the disease, but he and other conservative physicians express hope that Professor von Behring's discovery will prove of great value in the treatment of consumption. His claim that he has found a real consumption cure inspires the more confidence because it was he who discovered the antitoxin now used so widely and successfully in the prevention and cure of diphtheria. In giving to the world this remedy for dreaded diphtheria he conferred a great benefit upon mankind. The debt of the world to him would be heavy indeed should his consumption cure prove as successful as expected, thus making it possible to write down to his credit two of the most important discoveries of the age in the world of medicine.

There has been some criticism of Professor von Behring because of his announced intention of keeping the character of his consumption cure a secret from the world at large for a year in order that he may reap pecuniary benefit from his discovery. In explanation of this course it is stated that his experiments in the prosecution of his researches have been very costly. He is a poorly paid scholar of Prussia, receiving from the government an allowance to enable him to prosecute his studies. It takes every cent he can get to carry them on. In 1901 he received the Nobel prize of $40,000 for the discovery of a vaccine for the immunization of cattle from tuberculosis. It is said that every dollar of this sum went toward his expenses in making experiments. In withholding for a time the secret of his antitoxin for diphtheria he was able to make money to apply in the same way. It is also urged in explanation of his course that he desires to keep the use of the cure under his own observation for a time in order that confidence in its value may not be impaired by premature general use. Representatives of the professor in America say that the new cure will be ready for the general public by next August; that it will then be cheap, so that any physician can obtain it, and that special rates will be made to philanthropic institutions and to the poor. A wealthy citizen of New York has offered Professor von Behring $50,000 if he will announce the secret of his cure at once. He suggests that this be made a part of a fund to be contributed to the Paris physician, and the only qualification to the offer is that the treatment must first be pronounced successful by a committee of competent medical men. There is talk is Paris of making up a popular subscription to reimburse the professor if he will make his cure public, and it is said if the remedy is a success he will come into possession of an income of 40,000 francs from the Prix Lacave reserved by the French academy for the conqueror of tuberculosis and will also get 10,000 francs set apart for the same purpose by a wealthy Brazilian.

Professor von Behring was born in 1854 at Hansdorf, Prussia; studied medicine in Berlin and in 1880 became an army surgeon. In 1884 he was appointed a professor at the University of Halle. He was called in 1885 to become director of the Hygienic institute at Marburg. He is now a professor of the University of Berlin and a personal friend of the kaiser and lives on a large medical farm near Marburg. The farm comprises some 400 acres, and on it are about 400 cows and several hundred horses and other animals. It is said the enterprise requires for its support about $80,000 a year. His experiments have already accomplished a great deal in the direction of eradicating bovine tuberculosis, which, according to the opinion of those at the recent tuberculosis congress, is transmissible to the human species.

In Germany systematic methods for inoculation of cattle to prevent the spread of the disease among such animals have been for several years in progress of introduction.

SERIOUS, BUT A HUMORIST.

Jerome K. Jerome Has Grave Moods as Well as Gay.

Jerome K. Jerome, the humorist, who has come to this country to lecture, avers that he is a very serious man. Though he has made so many people laugh, he has an ambition, like many other joke makers, to be taken seriously. He has had a serious time of it in life. At fifteen he was thrown on his own resources and got employment as a clerk in a railway office. He stood it for three years, but, as Mr. Jerome himself has put it, "the routine was simply killing," and he got out of the railway business. Then he went on the stage, not altogether because he expected to become a great actor, but more, perhaps, because he wanted to do dramatic writing and needed to know stage technique. He came to grief as a traveling actor, but while on the stage had many experiences that served him in good stead later on.

He tried newspaper reporting and wrote about fires, inquests—everything. He would manifold his items and leave them at the offices of different papers, and those that used them paid 3 cents a line. His weekly receipts were not colossal in those days, and he was delighted when by chance he got a position as a dramatic critic, with a salary equal to $7.50 a week. Afterward he taught school, but the public was finding him out, and he is now one of the most popular writers of the day. Some reviewers are of the opinion that his story, "Paul Kelver," places him in a front rank as a novelist. His plays have been quite remunerative, and the royalties from "Miss Hobbs" alone have made him independent of routine work. He is forty-three years of age and has been a married man for seventeen years. Speaking of William Travers Jerome, New York's famous district attorney, the English writer says:

"Please attribute to me Jerome's virtues and none of his vices. The family is an old one. I pronounce my name Jerum K. Jerum. My first name is the same as the last. This is the work of my father, and for this I can be held in no way responsible. You see there was no consultation on the subject to which I was invited. The name was given to me, and I did not argue the point. It's too late now."

It is said that more copies of his "Three Men In a Boat" have been sold than of any other book since "Pickwick Papers," but at a dinner he attended two of the guests were overheard to argue as to what made Mr. Jerome famous.

"He writes books," said one.

"No he don't," was the contemptuous retort. "He rowed three men in a boat and then won the race. That's what he done."

Could Not Be Better.

The uniform success of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera ann Diarrhoea Remedy has won for it a wide reputation and many people throughout the country will agree with Mr. Charles W. Mattison, of Milford, Va., who says: "It works like magic, and is the best preparation I know of. It couldn't be any better." He had a serious attack o dysentery and was advised to try a bottle of this remedy, which he did, with the result that immediate relief was obtained. For sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Jury Subbing.

Mexico has an ingenious plan for facilitating verdicts in jury trials. Two supernumerary jurors are drawn to sit near the jury box and listen to the evidence and arguments. If any of the regular jury falls ill or is otherwise disqualified from going on, one of the "supes" takes his place. In this way they avoid what is often seen in American courts—a long trial rendered useless when it is nearly finished by the sudden illness or death of one juror.

Madrid's Night Watchmen.

Madrid still has the mediaeval night watchmen. They admit late comers to the apartment houses at night, but no longer sing out the hour or the condition of the weather. They still go by the name of "sereno," which they got from the fact that, as it seldom rains in Spain, their cries about the weather generally ended with that word ("las tres y sereno").

Some Seasonable Advice.

It may be a piece of superfluous advice to urge people at this season of the year to lay in a supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is almost sure to be needed before winter is over, and much more prompt and satisfactory results are obtained when taken as soon as a cold is contracted and before it has become settled in the system, which can only be done by keeping the remedy at hand. This remedy is so widely known and so altogether good that no one should hesitate about buying it in preference to any other. It is for sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Accent on the Operatic Stage.

No Englishman with daughters could do a rasher thing than permit them to take lessons from eminent professors with a view of going on the stage. The opera stage in England scarcely exists. At Covent Garden a woman who can speak good English can only get in by force of social influence, and abroad a foreigner has very great difficulty because she cannot speak or sing with a perfect accent. The foreign lady or gentleman comes across here and on occasion will venture to sing in English, and their mistakes bring nothing more than a smile to the faces of the audience. But let an English singer go to France or Germany, and something totally different happens.

In 1897 Tamagno sang at Monte Carlo before an audience which was mainly French. He mispronounced a word, and a peal of derisive laughter covered even his stentorian notes. In Brussels I heard an American tenor laughed at because some of his vowels were not quite pure—Brussels, where their French is the most villainous patois I have ever heard. In Germany I have heard both French and English artists laughed at because their accent was not absolutely correct.—London Saturday Review.

Siberian Convicts.

Some interesting phases of Siberian life are described in Samuel Turner's book on that country. Of the exiles he writes: "When I told a Siberian friend that I carried a revolver as a protection against wolves I was promptly informed that I had much more reason to fear the human wolves I might encounter, and this, I found, was a general view of the case. About one-third of the criminal exiles escape all control. Armed with a stick, to which is attached a strong piece of cord or catgut, they will approach the unwary traveler from behind, throw the cord round his neck and quietly strangle him by twisting the stick, to rob him at their leisure of whatever he may possess or secure his passport in order to make their escape from the country."

CONCURRENT RESOLUTIONS, 1905.

STATE OF NEW YORK, OFFICE OF THE Secretary of State, Albany, July 25, 1905.—Pursuant to the provisions of section one of article fourteen of the Constitution of the State of New York, and section seven of chapter nine hundred and nine of the Laws of eighteen hundred and ninety-six, notice is hereby given that the following proposed amendment to section ten of article eight of the Constitution of the State of New York is to be submitted to the people for approval at the next General Election in this State to be held on the seventh day of November, nineteen hundred and five, and is published once a week for three months next preceding such General Election in conformity with the aforesaid provisions. JOHN F. O'BRIEN, Secretary of State.

AMENDMENT NUMBER ONE.

Concurrent Resolution of the Senate and Assembly, proposing an amendment to section ten of article eight of the constitution, relating to the limitation of indebtedness of counties, cities, towns and villages by excepting the city of New York from the provisions of said section after the first day of January, nineteen hundred and four.

Whereas, The legislature at its regular session in nineteen hundred and one duly adopted a resolution providing for an amendment to the constitution relating to the limitation of indebtedness of counties, cities, towns and villages, by excepting the city of New York from the provisions of said section after the first day of January, nineteen hundred and four; and Whereas, Such resolution has been duly published in accordance with law and the constitution and referred to this legislature for action, therefore: Section 1. Resolved (if the assembly concur), That section ten of article eight of the constitution be amended to read as follows: Article VIII. § 10. No county, city, town or village shall hereafter give any money or property, or loan its money or credit to or in aid of any individual, association or corporation, or become directly or indirectly the owner of stock in, or bonds of, any association or corporation; nor shall any such county, city, town or village be allowed to incur any indebtedness except for county, city or town or village purposes. This section shall not prevent such county, city, town or village from making such provision for the aid or support of its poor as may be authorized by law. No county or city shall be allowed to become indebted for any purpose or in any manner to an amount which, including existing indebtedness, shall exceed ten per centum of the assessed valuation of the real estate of such county or city subject to taxation, as it appeared by the assessment rolls of said county or city on the last assessment for state or county taxes prior to the incurring of such indebtedness; and all indebtedness in excess of such limitation, except such as now may exist, shall be absolutely void, except as herein otherwise provided. No county or city whose present indebtedness exceeds ten per centum of the assessed valuation of its real estate subject to taxation, shall be allowed to become indebted in any further amount until such indebtedness shall be reduced within such limit. This section shall not be construed to prevent the issuing of certificates of indebtedness or revenue bonds issued in anticipation of the collection of taxes for amounts actually contained, or to be contained, in the taxes for the year when such certificates or revenue bonds are issued and payable out of such taxes. Nor shall this section be construed to prevent the issue of bonds to provide for the supply of water; but the term of the bonds issued to provide the supply of water shall not exceed twenty years, and a sinking fund shall be created on the issuing of the said bonds for their redemption, by raising annually a sum which will produce an amount equal to the sum of the principal and interest of said bonds at their maturity. All certificates of indebtedness or revenue bonds issued in anticipation of the collection of taxes, which are not retired within five years after their date of issue, and bonds issued to provide for the supply of water, and any debt hereafter incurred by any portion or part of a city, if there shall be any such debt, shall be included in ascertaining the power of the city to become otherwise indebted; except that debts incurred by the city of New York after the first day of January, nineteen hundred and four, to provide for the supply of water shall not be so included. Whenever the boundaries of any city are the same as those of a county, or when any city shall include within its boundaries more than one county, the power of any county wholly included within such city to become indebted shall cease, but the debt of the county, heretofore existing, shall not, for the purposes of this section, be reckoned as a part of the city debt. The amount hereafter to be raised by tax for county or city purposes, in any county containing a city of over one hundred thousand inhabitants, or any such city of this state, in addition to providing for the principal and interest of existing debt, shall not in the aggregate exceed in any one year two per centum of the assessed valuation of the real and personal estate of such county or city, to be ascertained as prescribed in this section in respect to county or city debt. § 2. Resolved (if the assembly concur), that the foregoing amendment be submitted to the people for approval at the general election to be held in the year nineteen hundred and five in accordance with the provisions of the election law.

Russian Discipline.

General Dragomiroff, the Russian military expert, rose from the ranks and always dressed according to the army regulations for the common soldier. One day while driving about St. Petersburg in his carriage he noticed a soldier with hair longer than the regulations called for. He had the horses stopped, alighted and, taking off his hat, ordered the soldier to come him by the hair. The soldier hesitated. He feared to lay violent hands on his general; besides, the hair was clipped too close to afford a hold for the hands. The general surveyed the soldier sternly for a few moments, then twirled his fingers in the latter's locks, literally wiped up the street with him, the victim not daring to resist. Finally, having impressed the lesson thoroughly, he re-entered his carriage and drove on, ordering the soldier to follow. At the first barber's shop they came to, he again alighted and had every vestige of hair shaved from the soldier's head, then turned him loose as a horrible example to his fellows.

Nelson's Famous Signal.

It is a fact that Nelson's famous signal to the fleet at Trafalgar was in its original form, "England 'confides' (not 'expects') that every man will do his duty." This is the story as given by Captain Pasco, Nelson's flag lieutenant on the Victory: "His lordship came to me on the poop, and after ordering certain signals to be made about a quarter to noon he said, 'Mr. Pasco, I wish to say to the fleet, "England confides that every man will do his duty,"' And he added, 'You must be quick, for I have one more to make, which is for close action.' I replied, 'If your lordship will permit me to substitute "expects" for "confides," the signal will soon be completed, because the word "expects" is in the vocabulary, whereas "confides" must be spelled.' His lordship replied in haste and with seeming satisfaction, 'That will do, Pasco; make it directly.'" And the famous signal was made.—London Chronicle.

The Perfect Pun.

A perfect pun makes good sense both ways; the edges meet with a click like the blades of a sharp pair of shears. Sometimes the very thoughts fit tight together in antagonistic identity, as when the man said of the temperance exhorter that he would be a good fellow if he would only let drink alone, or when Disraeli (if it was he) wrote to the youth who had sent him a first novel: "I thank you very much. I shall lose no time in reading it;" or as when a man, seeing a poor piece of carpentry, said, "That chicken coop looks as if some man had made it himself." Exquisite perverse literalness of thought! And the same absolute punning, the very self destruction of a proposition, was the old death thrust at a poor poet by the friend who said, "His poetry will be read when Shakespeare and Homer are forgotten." It was a fine double edged blade of speech until some crude fellow, Heine, I think, sharpened it to a wire edge by adding, "and not till then," a banality that dulled its perfection forever.—J. A. Macy in Atlantic.

Coffee In Guatemala.

The laborers in the coffee plantations in Guatemala get only 3 to 20 cents (gold) a day. The capitalists get as profit 50 to 60 per cent of the market value. During harvesting time the coffee business gives employment to more than one-half of the population. A single coffee tree, under the most favorable conditions, has been known to yield twenty-five pounds of beans.

Date Mark a Bagdad Malady.

Bagdad date mark is the name given to a mysterious disease that attacks nearly every one who stays in Bagdad for any length of time and is found also at Aleppo and other places in Turkish Asia. It is a sore that comes only once, but lasts a year, leaving a scar the shape of a date. Nearly all the natives are marked with it. No remedy has been found for it, but hyposulphite of soda seems to have some effect on the mark.

"He did not say so in words, but he intimated it."

Why Rossini Wept.

When Meyerbeer died his son composed a funeral march which "remembered his dead father." Full of emotion, the young man took it to Rossini.

"Play it, maestro," he pleaded; "play it. I wrote it in expression of my grief and mourning for my dead father."

Rossini took it up, placed it on his piano and played it. Tears rolled down his cheeks. Utter sadness dwelt upon his countenance.

"You weep," cried young Meyerbeer, beside himself with joy at the effect upon the great master.

"Yes, I weep," rejoined Rossini amid tears.

"And why?"

"Because," replied Rossini, "I am wishing that you were dead and it was your father who had written the funeral march."

Nilsson and Patti.

When Christine Nilsson, the great singer, was asked her opinion of various singers, she gave it very candidly of every one, including herself and Mme. Albani, but she never once alluded to Mme. Patti.

"You have not mentioned Mme. Patti," remarked the pertinacious interviewer.

"No," said Mme. Nilsson "I [illegible] You are asking about singers. I regard Patti as a singer. I [illegible] among the angels. A Patti only comes to a planet once during that planet's existence." Such an absence of self jealousy has probably never been equaled.

AMENDMENT NUMBER SEVEN.

Concurrent Resolution of the Senate and Assembly, proposing an amendment to section two of article six of the constitution in relation to justices of the appellate division of the supreme court. Whereas, The legislature at its regular session in nineteen hundred and four duly adopted a resolution, proposing an amendment to section two of article six of the constitution, in relation to justices of the appellate division of the supreme court; and Whereas, Such resolution has been duly published in accordance with law and the constitution, and referred to this legislature for action; therefore: Section 1. Resolved (if the assembly concur), That section two of article six of the constitution be amended to read as follows: Article VI. § 2. The legislature shall divide the state into four judicial departments. The first department shall consist of the county of New York; the others shall be bounded by county lines, and be compact and equal in population as nearly as may be. Once every ten years the legislature may alter the judicial departments, but without increasing the number thereof. There shall be an appellate division of the supreme court, consisting of seven justices in the first department, and of five justices in each of the other departments. In each department four shall constitute a quorum, and the concurrence of three shall be necessary to a decision. No more than five justices shall sit in any case. From all the justices elected to the supreme court the governor shall designate those who shall constitute the appellate division in each department; and he shall designate the presiding justice thereof, who shall act as such during his term of office, and shall be a resident of the department. The other justices shall be designated for terms of five years or the unexpired portions of their respective terms of office, if less than five years. From time to time as the terms of such designations expire, or vacancies occur, he shall make new designations. A majority of the justices so designated to sit in the appellate division, in each department shall be residents of the department. He may also make temporary designations in case of the absence or inability to act of any justice in the appellate division, or in case the presiding justice of any appellate division shall certify to him that one or more additional justices are needed for the speedy disposition of the business before it. Whenever the appellate division in any department shall be unable to dispose of its business within a reasonable time, a majority of the presiding justices of the several departments at a meeting called by the presiding justice of the department in arrears may transfer any pending appeals from such department to any other department for hearing and determination. No justice of the appellate division shall, within the department to which he may be designated to perform the duties of an appellate justice, exercise any of the powers of a justice of the supreme court, other than those of a justice out of court, and those pertaining to the appellate division, or to the hearing and decision of motions submitted by consent of counsel, but any such justice, when not actually engaged in performing the duties of such appellate justice in the department to which he is designated, may hold any term of the supreme court and exercise any of the powers of a justice of the supreme court in any county or judicial district in any other department of the state. From and after the last day of December, eighteen hundred and ninety-five, the appellate division shall have the jurisdiction now exercised by the supreme court at its general terms and by the general terms of the court of common pleas for the city and county of New York, the superior court of the city of New York, the superior court of Buffalo and the city of Brooklyn, and such additional jurisdiction as may be conferred by the legislature. It shall have power to appoint and remove a reporter. The justices of the appellate division in each department shall have power to fix the times and places for holding special terms therein, and to assign the justices in the departments to hold such terms or to make rules therefor. § 2. Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the foregoing amendment be submitted to the people for approval at the general election to be held in the year nineteen hundred and five in accordance with the provisions of the election law.

A Balky Mule.

It is stated on the authority of officers in the Confederate army that a balky mule decided the battle of Gettysburg. The southern and northern troops were both attempting to reach an eminence the position of which practically decided the battle, and the southern column was blocked by a balky mule just long enough to enable the northern troops to gain the eminence, and so that balky mule really decided the battle.

Luck or Good Management.

"I heard Crabbe say he had never had such luck in his business as he's having now, but I didn't understand whether it was good luck or bad."

"He meant bad luck, of course! If it was good luck he wouldn't speak of it as 'luck' at all."—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Modesty of Hokusai.

Young artists, not gaining distinction early, have had various instances to quote as showing that masterly performance often came late in life. In Dora Amsden's book on Japanese art it is set forth that this is what the celebrated Japanese artist Hokusai wrote about himself: "From the age of six I had a mania for drawing the forms of things. By the time I was fifty I had published an infinity of designs, but all I have produced before the age of seventy is not worth taking into account. At seventy-five I learned a little about the real structure of nature—of animals, plants and trees, birds, fishes and insects. In consequence, when I am eighty I shall have made still more progress. At ninety I shall penetrate the mystery of things. At a hundred I shall certainly have reached a marvelous stage, and when I am 110 everything I do—be it but a line or dot—will be alive. I beg those who live as long as I do to see if I do not keep my word." Hokusai died in 1849 at the age of eighty-nine.

JEWISH HUMOR.

Its Flavor of Bitterness and Its Satire of Judaism.

Renan said of the Jews, "The Semitic people are almost entirely without the power to laugh." Surely had he looked for traces of Jewish humor in the light which Heine casts back upon its dark tradition he would never have made so sweeping a statement. For eight years Heine lay upon his "mattress grave" in Paris suffering excruciating agony. He deserved, he said, to have awarded to him "the grand medals of pain and misery." Leopold Zunz said almost the same words of the whole Hebrew people, "If there are ranks in suffering, Israel takes precedence of all the nations." The humor of Israel is flavored with bitterness and plays round the greater subjects of thought and of speculation; plays like the humor of a man in pain.

Listen to the lament of a satirist born at Arles in 1287 who finds the works of the Jewish law an intolerable burden and seems to have come, like Heine, to the bitter conclusion that "Judaism is not a religion, it is a misfortune:"

Oh, hapless sire, distraught with cares,
Whose wife to him male children bears,
For all of them, or rich or poor,
Have only suffering to endure.
This is caused by the Jewish creed,
Whose yoke is hard to bear indeed.
Its many laws and regulations
Which are unknown to other nations
Every Hebrew must observe
With watchful eye and straining nerve;
E'en though he shares in public functions,
He still must follow their injunctions.

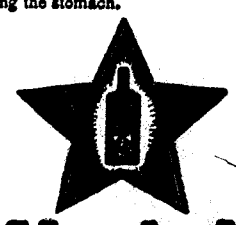
* * * * * * *

The Bible is not half enough;
Glosses there are and other stuff
In which he erudite must be,
Especially in theology,
In all the Talmud may relate,
In authors' quarrels and debate,
In things particularly small,
Of no significance at all.

One more mediaeval quotation, this time from the pen of a Barcelona Jew. The lines can hardly perhaps be called humorous, but they illustrate with a certain terse comedy the great value set by the race upon three things—money, knowledge and domestic happiness. If a man has none of them the poet has no better advice to give him than to hold his tongue or to hang himself:

What is the most useful thing to any man in life?
Knowledge or wealth or a good and loving wife.
But if none of these commodities man has ever got
Then by keeping golden silence he might improve his lot.
And if he cannot do so, that poor and hapless knave,
Then let him go away at once and dig himself a grave.

On his deathbed Heine made his last joke, and it is typically Jewish. "Reviewing his by no means irreproachable past," he hoped that God might forgive him, "for c'est son metier"—(that is his trade). Another story illustrates yet more perfectly the bitter humor of the Jew. It is the story of a dying rabbi "who had been all his lifetime extremely religious, but had likewise always suffered much want and misery. 'Do you know,' he said to those in the sickroom, 'if after all the sad experiences I have had in the past there is no future life I shall be greatly amused.'"—London Spectator.



There Was a Limit.

An Irishman one day went into the shop of a barber to get shaved. After being properly seated and the lather about half applied the barber was called to an adjoining room, where he was detained for some time. The barber had in the shop as a pet a monkey, which was continually imitating its master. As soon as the latter left the room the monkey grabbed the brush and proceeded to finish lathering the Irishman's face. After doing this he took a razor from its case and stropped it and then turned to the Irishman to shave him.

"Shtop that!" said Pat. "Ye can tuck the towel in me neck and put the soap on me face, but, begorrah, yer father's got to shave me!"

REPUBLICAN PRINCIPLES.

Electors, do not let any argument cause you to waver in your allegiance to Republican principles. True Republicanism "stands pat" for protection and purity in nation, State, county, city and home, and it is your duty, by your vote at the coming election, to endorse these principles. Guard them as jealously as does a pure woman her honor; as sacredly as does a husband his wife; as tenderly as does a father his daughter; as loyally as does a brother his sister, and when the ballots are counted Nov. 7 you will find yourself one of a vast majority of victors.

Theodore Roosevelt, the president of this nation, who is respected and beloved by all nations, is a living exponent of these principles, and it is due to this fact that he was elected almost unanimously president of the United States last November.

It is not inconsistent to mention that as popular as was our president in this city last Fall, more popular by six votes was the Hon. T. D. Lewis, the present Republican nominee for the Assembly, against whom not one adverse criticism has been made by his constituents during his tenure of the office to which he will be re-elected this Fall.

JUDGE DEVENDORF.

Judge Devendorf, the Republican nominee for the Supreme Court bench in this Judicial district, paid the TIMES office a visit last week. He was accompanied by Postmaster Ransom of Herkimer. Assemblyman T. D. Lewis escorted both gentlemen throughout the city and introduced them to the prominent Republicans of Fulton. Judge Devendorf had been making a tour of the district and was greatly pleased at the cordialty and unanimity of sentiment in his favor, which was a presa e of victory by a large majority Nov. 7.

The Herkimer Democrat describes Judge Devendorf as being "a man preeminently of the people. He had attained the prominence in public life which he now enjoyed because of his energetic and sterling integrity. He is a good lawyer and a man of excellent judgment, and with this combination he will make a good Supreme Court judge."

"OLD HOME WEEK."

The Chamber of Commerce officials have under advisement the celebration of Volney's centennial next year, probably in the early Summer. There was an informal discussion of the project at the meeting held last Wednesday evening, but owing to the rain the attendance was not large. The consensus of opinion, however, was that the event should be celebrated in a fitting manner, and what could be more appropriate than an "Old Home" week for Fulton and vicinity, as first suggested in the TIMES, and which has received the hearty endorsement of its readers at home and abroad? The earnest co-operation of all citizens should be enlisted. The project is practical and can be made successful and memorable.

EDWARD QUIRK'S letter of acceptance reached The Times office on Wednesday morning too late for publication.

DIED.

Lulu, the infant daughter of Mr and Mrs. James Jerolman, died on Monday and the funeral was held from the home on Tuesday afternoon.

Phoebe A Davis, aged 82, died at the residence of Mr. John Stewart in Palermo, Oct. 21. Funeral services were held this Wednesday at 12 o'clock from the late residence. Burial at Sales Corners.

John B. Maxwell, aged 78, died at the residence of Mr. Harley Simons, four miles southeast of Fulton, Oct. 17. Funeral services were held Oct. 18 from the late residence. Burial at Mt. Pleasant.

Mrs. Elias Sloat, aged 59, died at her home in Phoenix on Sunday, Oct. 15. She is survived by her husband, one daughter, Florence Sloat, and two sons, James Bush of Phoenix and Henry Bush of Fulton.

Marion E. Simons, aged 78, died on Monday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Alonzo Wright, at Sayles Corners. The deceased who was a former resident of Fulton, is survived by her daughter and one son, Mr. Jay B. Simons of this city. The funeral was held from the Presbyterian church this Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, the Rev. W. L. Sawtelle, officiating.

Mrs. James Roberts, wife of a former pastor of the Baptist church in this city, died at her home in Paris, Ills., on Friday. Her funeral services were held from her girlhood home at Granville, O., on Monday, and the body was laid to rest in Columbus, O., on Tuesday. The news of her death was received with deep sorrow by her many friends in Fulton, all of whom extend sympathy to the bereaved husband.

"One by one we cross the river," and on the evening of Oct. 19 Mrs. Elizabeth Case passed from suffering into peace—the peace which this world cannot give, and which all eternity will not take away. She was 71 years of age and the last remaining member of her own immediate family. She leaves one son, William Case, and one grandson, Harry Case. The tired spirit is at rest after many long years of weakness. She had consumption, but was a marvel of patience and fortitude; most uncomplaining, and to the last retained her interest in the friends about her.

Only our Heavenly Father above knew her thoughts and feelings during these years of, waiting in her chair for death to come as a release. She had told them only to Him who knows our bitterness of soul better than we can tell it.

We, as friends and neighbors, cannot but rejoice that the new and better life has just begun, and her weakness and helplessness has ended.

She had been slowly dying for a long time, but the end came at last without one struggle, like the going out of a light—instantaneous and peaceful as a happy dream.

She was one of the oldest members of Zion church and as long as her health would permit was a regular and devoted attendant. She was one of God's little ones, so small and feeble that it seemed remarkably strange that she could have lived so many years; but God's ways are not ours, and in His own good time He has called her home, to be folded in the everlasting arms where all is peace, even the peace which passeth all understanding.

"He giveth His beloved sleep."

Funeral services were held at the home on Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, conducted by the Rev. A. H. Grant.

STATE SANITARY CONVENTION.

Annual Conference Recently Held in Albany—Dr. D. E. Lake Furnishes Interesting Summary of Proceedings.

EDITOR TIMES:

I had the pleasure of attending the fifth annual conference of the Sanitary Officers of the State of New York. The meeting was held in the Assembly Chamber of the Capitol at Albany, where between two and three hundred health officers were present from all parts of the State, to hear and discuss the various subjects that are of vital interest to every citizen, not only in this State, but throughout this great country. The importance of the gathering and the necessity of enlightening our citizens on sanitary matters is sufficient reason for imparting what knowledge I may have acquired along those lines through attending the convention.

Governor Higgins' address was full of cheer and encouragement. He said the sanitary officials had the intelligence of the people and the iron hand of the law to aid in the work.

Commissioner Porter, in his address, elaborately outlined the present policy of the State Department of Health. Among other things he stated that there was no work more important than that which lies immediately before the Department of Health, of which we were all members. He also said that among the serious and weighty questions are the conservation of our water supply, the checking of the pollution of streams and watercourses, the ultimate prevention of tuberculosis, the abatement and extinction of epidemics of typhoid fever, scarlet fever, diphtheria and small-pox; the investigation of Summer resorts; the determination and abolishment of serious nuisances, and a betterment in the system of registration of vital statistics. The speaker also emphasized the fact that what we need most in this country is a campaign of education on all sanitary matters, and this must be thorough and extensive enough to educate the public, the profession and the patient.

The other addresses on the program were equally interesting and instructive, especially those illustrated with lantern slides.

The trip to the Saratoga Springs disposal plant was equally important and interesting. The plant covers about twenty acres of land, and is a complete piece of engineering. It has been in operation two years; is perhaps the nearest correct in every particular and gives entire satisfaction.

The State Board did everything possible to entertain and to fill in the waiting moments of the delegates to the best advantage, and no health officer can afford to miss one of such conferences, because all parts of his work is carefully gone over by the best talent in the State. He is sure to carry back home with him information that will help him in his work of caring for the health and comfort of the people.

Yours for better sanitary conditions.

BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS.

A special meeting of the Board of Public Works was held on Friday evening when the motion to pay Albert Salisbury $80, for damage to horse and carriage, was rescinded, as the Board found it had not power to act. The matter was referred to the City Attorney.

Material was furnished G. F. Schenck for a crosswalk on Schuyler street opposite his home, as he agreed to do the work providing the planks were furnished.

The Board decided to purchase a 2-inch crown meter to be installed at the Nestle Food plant, at a cost of $65. The Fourth street improvement tax was referred to the Common Council for assessment and collection. The resignation of Superintendent Taft was received and accepted.

Bids will be requested on one boat load of 250 tons bituminous coal to be delivered at the dock at the pumping station before the close of navigation.

ETIQUETTE AMONG PEERS.

Rules Laid Down to Preserve the Dignity of Their Chamber.

Besides insisting upon all due respect to themselves the peers suffer no disrespect to the stately gilded chamber in which they are accustomed to assemble. Even when parliament is not in session none but members are allowed to be covered there. Not even the eldest son of any peer may wear his hat in the room. "Neither is any person to stay there, nor any attendant on any nobleman but while he brings in his lord, and then he is to retire himself."

In 1703 official notice was taken of the fact that of late the doorkeepers have frequently presumed to come within the doors when the house is sitting, and it was therefore ordered that for the future this liberty be forbidden. Another point in which the peers are scrupulous to preserve their dignity is revealed in the standing order with reference to conferences between the two houses.

It sets forth that "the place of our meeting with the lower house upon conference is usually the painted chamber, where they are commonly before we come and expect our leisure. We are to come thither in a whole body and not some lords scattering before the rest, which both takes from the gravity of the lords and besides may hinder the lords from taking their proper places. We are to sit there and be covered, but they are not at any committee or conference either to be covered or sit down in our presence unless it be some infirm person and that by connivance in a corner out of sight, to sit, but not to be covered."

Although never rescinded, this regulation is now practically obsolete.—Chambers' Journal.

Trick of the Drug Trade.

"Never ask for the copy of a prescription at the time you buy the medicine," said the dyspeptic looking man. "In nine out of ten drug stores they will tack 10 or 15 cents to the regular price of the medicine if you do. That of course is contrary to professional etiquette. Druggists are not supposed to charge extra for furnishing a copy of a prescription. If you will wait a few days and ask for it, unaccompanied by a bottle of medicine, they won't have the nerve to do it, but when the two are prepared together they can gain some compensation for their extra work and the loss of a possible customer without anybody being the wiser."—New York Press.

Tales Told About Prominent People

Henry Irving's Kind Heart—Presidents Butler and Schurman on Graft. United States Minister Gummere—Jordan and Cotton.

MANY stories are told of the late Sir Henry Irving's kindness of heart. In a one act piece called "Cramond Brig," which Sir Henry Irving produced at the Lyceum, there was a supper scene in a cottage. A steaming sheep's head and an oat cake were brought in, and the cotter's small boy was supposed to do justice to the feast.

As a matter of fact, the boy who played the part ate with little relish, for the sheep's head was served without salt or other seasoning, the only stage demand being that it should send up a cloud of steam and be piping hot.

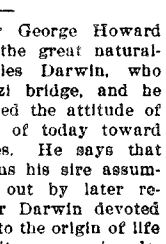
SIR HENRY IRVING

One night the meat chanced to be well cooked, and the boy entered into the spirit of the scene with extraordinary realism. Irving noticed it and spoke of it after the play.

"How did the sheep's head go, my boy?" he asked.

"'Twas prime!" declared the boy. "It had salt in it tonight."

"Ah, I thought you liked it!" said Irving. Then, with a sigh of regretful memory, he added, "Boys are always hungry!"



No sooner was that boy out of hearing than Irving ordered that a sheep's head should be carefully cooked, perfectly seasoned and served every night thereafter.

After that it was hard to tell which got the most out of that savory sheep's head—the boy who ate it or the actor who watched him.

It was Professor George Howard Darwin, a son of the great naturalist, the late Charles Darwin, who opened the Zambezi bridge, and he has recently reviewed the attitude of the scientific world of today toward his father's theories. He says that some of the positions his sire assumed are not borne out by later researches. The elder Darwin devoted himself to study as to the origin of life on our planet and its progressive development under the conditions of what has been termed "evolution." The younger Darwin goes farther back than his renowned parent, for he has made a special study of the origin of the planet itself and of its satellite, the moon. He is an astronomer, has been Plumian professor of astronomy and experimental philosophy at Cambridge university since 1883 and was born at Down, Kent, in 1845. He can add a long list of degrees after his name and has written several works of a learned nature, his researches pertaining chiefly to tidal observations and the effects of tidal friction on the earth and on the moon. Professor Darwin figures that the separation between the earth and moon took place about 54,000,000 years ago and that in a few million years more sun friction will have retarded the rotation of the earth to such an extent that our days will be 960 hours in length instead of twenty-four, as at present.

PROFESSOR G. H. DARWIN.

Samuel R. Gummere, United States minister to Morocco, who has been forced to leave his country home in the suburbs of Tangier because of fighting between tribesmen in its immediate vicinity, has had experience with dangerous bands before. The warfare now in progress almost under the walls of Tangier is between the rival Anghera and Raisuli tribes. At the time when Raisuli and his men captured the American, Perdicaris, Mr. Gummere was consul to Tangier, and his services on this occasion resulted in his appointment afterward as our minister at the court of his shereefian majesty Abdul Aziz.

S. R. GUMMERE.

Perdicaris was captured late in the evening at his country home, and it was long after midnight when Mr. Gummere heard of the affair. Despite the danger, the American consul leaped upon his horse and rode to the scene of the abduction. Arriving safely at Perdicaris' home, Mr. Gummere saw to the protection of the ladies of the family and departed immediately to seek a night audience with the sultan of Morocco. At first he was denied, but when he made his demands in the name of the United States government the sultan thought better of his refusal and granted the audience. Mr. Gummere demanded that negotiations be opened immediately with the bandit and that strong measures be taken to secure the prisoner's release. Should his demands be neglected he promised war, and he made good his threat by securing the presence of two American gunboats soon after. How successful he was is now a matter of history.

President Jacob Gould Schurman of Cornell university is one of the educators of the country who keep in touch with current events and public thought on burning issues. His words on the subject of recent revelations about life insurance have attracted much attention. In his address at the opening of Cornell he denounced the "colossal immorality in the management of public trusts" exposed in the insurance investigation and declared that "we need to go back to the old ground that a man's life consists not in the attainment of this world's possessions, but in the development of the best character and power that are in him." He was born in Prince Edward's Island, and it was by dint of hard work that he obtained enough money to get an education, and then advanced himself in his profession as an educator until he reached the high post he occupies today. Though born in British dominions he is a very patriotic citizen of the United States. One Fourth of July a few years ago the president's eldest son, Robert, who was born in New York state, had exploded all of the firecrackers provided for the occasion much before dark. The youngster and his little friends were very anxious for more celebration, so young Bob sought out his father and asked for additional money wherewith to buy firecrackers.

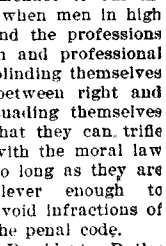
JACOB GOULD SCHURMAN.

"Papa, will you please give me some more money? My firecrackers are all gone, and it isn't 4 o'clock yet."

"I will, my son, if you can tell me what you are celebrating with all of these fireworks," replied Mr. Schurman.

"I can do that easy enough, pop," said the boy. "This is the anniversary of the day we licked you fellows."

The money was at once forthcoming, and President Schurman felt sure that his son knew the meaning of the day.



A college president who has recently taken the insurance revelations as the text for an address to his students is Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia university. President Butler says the American people "are receiving some painful lessons in practical ethics" which emphasize "the distinction between character and reputation." A man's true character, Dr. Butler says, may be quite in conflict with his reputation, "which is the public estimate of him."

He says it is a menace to our integrity as a people when men in high place in business and the professions secure material gain and professional prosperity through blinding themselves as to distinctions between right and wrong and by persuading themselves that they can trifle with the moral law so long as they are clever enough to avoid infractions of the penal code.

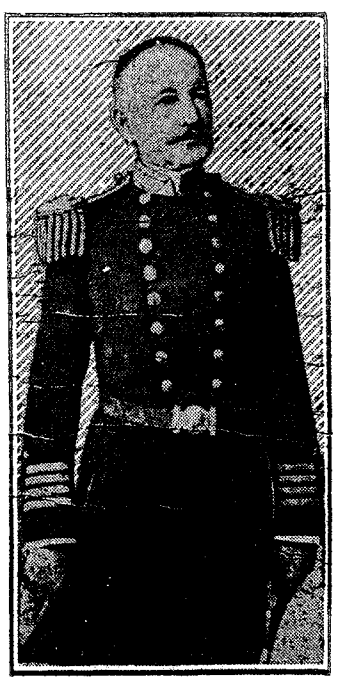
NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER.

President Butler was the recipient of many courtesies from Emperor William of Germany while abroad the past summer. He had occasion to confer with the German ruler on the subject of exchanges of professors between German and American universities, an idea suggested by the kaiser and taken up in this country. He also received a degree from Oxford university, and at the opening ceremonies at Columbia this fall, when the cornerstone of a new college hall named after Alexander Hamilton was laid, he wore for the first time the academic costume to which his Oxford honors entitle him. It was noted that the costume intensified the dignity of his bearing. As a young man he was quite slender and not at all of imposing presence. He is still comparatively young, being but forty-three, yet with passing years has gained weight as well as learning, and in scholastic dress makes an impressive figure. But he is by no means a stickler for traditions, nor does he fence himself in from the public or the student body by an atmosphere of impenetrable reserve. He is a man of affairs as well as a scholar and if he had gone into business would have been a captain of industry. In fact, for a man of forty-three he has accomplished so much that they sometimes call him at Columbia "Nicholas Miraculous Butler."

The cotton growers of the southern states have an active champion in President Harvie Jordan of the Southern Cotton association, who is working to offset the bear influence in Wall street on the price of cotton. He urges the growers to hold their cotton for a time and says that if they work together they can perfect a systematic play throughout the south between the farmers and bankers which will result in tying up the crop for as long a time as may be necessary to break the power of the speculators over the product. He declares: "We are now organized and know our strength. We can campaign every militia district in the cotton belt. Our smokehouses and corncribs are now filled with an abundance. We are ready for the fight."

HARVIE JORDAN.

Mr. Jordan is a young appearing man of energetic and enterprising character. Besides being at the head of the Southern Cotton association he has been first vice president of the Farmers' National Congress of the United States. He is a Georgian and a soldier of Monticello.



Armored Cruisers In Speed Contest

Three of Rear Admiral Brownson's Squadron to Race For the President. Test of the Navy's Formidable New Fighting Unit.

THE great ocean race which President Roosevelt will witness on his homeward trip from New Orleans will be a novel event for this country. It will be a race between some of the swiftest vessels of the navy, and the president will be spectator, judge, timekeeper and referee. When Mr. Roosevelt leaves the city of New Orleans he will go on board the armored cruiser West Virginia and will be conveyed by that vessel as far on his journey back to Washington as Hampton Roads. He will thus avoid infringement of the quarantine regulations of the states through which he would pass were he to make the homeward trip by rail.

It chanced that Rear Admiral Willard H. Brownson was to assemble his armored cruiser division at Key West for a practice cruise about the time of Mr. Roosevelt's New Orleans visit. The admiral was therefore ordered to proceed to New Orleans with his flagship, the West Virginia, and take the president on board upon the conclusion of his stay in the Crescent City. It was known that Mr. Roosevelt had long been desirous of testing the efficiency of the new armored cruisers, so it was decided that when the West Virginia reached Key West on her return from New Orleans a long distance race between the different vessels of the squadron should begin and that this should be made a part of the regular drill of the fleet.

Rear Admiral Brownson's command includes the West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Colorado, four of the fastest and best equipped vessels in the navy. Repairs are to be made on the Maryland, which may keep her out of the race. When the other three ships leave Key West they will enter upon a race of 1,200 miles under forced draft, and naval experts will watch with interest the conduct of the vessels under the conditions of the contest. Each has on trial developed speed of from 22.14 to 22.43 knots. The contest bears on the general question of the relative merits of cruisers and battleships. When the four armored cruisers above named were recently assembled in a division under command of Admiral Brownson it marked an epoch in the development of the American navy. Naval authorities have come to recognize more and more the importance of armored cruisers. Their value was strikingly shown in the great battle of the sea of Japan. Admiral Togo's force in this contest was vastly inferior to that of Admiral Rojestvensky in the matter of battleships, but this inferiority was apparently more than offset by the advantage the Japanese commander possessed in the number and strength of his armored cruisers. The latter proved of incalculable service at the critical stage of the fighting. The visit of Prince Louis of Battenberg to American waters with his flagship Drake and the other swift vessels of his cruiser squadron calls attention to the emphasis placed upon the value of fleet armored fighting ships by the British naval experts. By the end of the present year Great Britain will have twenty-six armored cruisers of the type of the Drake. Besides the Brooklyn and New York, which did such good work in the war with Spain, the United States now has in service or under construction ten other armored cruisers. These approximate battleships in strength of construction and armament, though faster by several knots.

Willard Herbert Brownson, whose flagship will be the home of the president for several exciting days, is an officer whose record is full of valiant deeds. He was born at Lyons, N. Y., in 1845 and graduated at Annapolis in 1865. During the war with Spain he was in command of the cruiser Yankee. It was he who broke the blockade at Rio Janeiro established by Mello in the Brazilian insurrection in 1894. He insisted on giving to American coffee ships safe conduct to their docks, and when he fired a shot from the Detroit, which he then commanded, the Brazilian commander yielded, and the blockade collapsed.

He is a big gun in his own territory and was quite a figure as an assemblyman and later as senator in the New York legislature, but he says that at Washington there are so many legislators that one more or less doesn't count. That is why he thinks he would like it better to be back at Albany.

The congressman is affectionately known by his constituents as "Big Tim" and has also been dubbed "Dry Dollar" Sullivan. The latter sobriquet was bestowed upon him in consequence of an incident of his extreme youth. He started out at six years of age to make a living by shining shoes for policemen in a station house. One day he found a revenue stamp on a beer keg. He loosened it and then hurried home and dried it by the fire. "What are you doing, Tim?" asked his mother.

"I'm drying a dollar, ma. I found it on a beer keg," replied the young hopeful; hence the name by which he afterward became famous. When "Big Tim" went to congress some doubt was expressed as to how the hero of "de ole Ate" might get along in the society of the distinguished personages found at the capital. One of his admirers, however, declared:

"Just wait till you see Tim tackle the ambassadors, counts and markeses! He can outbow any of them, and Teddy will tip Tim off on any little points that he isn't familiar with yet."

One day in the house of representatives there was a heated argument over the question of abolishing the free distribution of garden seeds by the department of agriculture.

"My constituents believe in the free distribution of garden seeds, and I shall not vote to cut them off," declared Mr. Sullivan.

"But what possible use can your constituents have for garden seeds?" some one asked.

"They make soup of them," responded the New York member.

PIPES AND PIPERS.

Origin and Popularity of Scotland's National Instrument.

There is no music so sweet to the ear of a Scotchman as that of the bagpipe, and the meeting of pipers at Oban, Scotland, recently was a great occasion. It was presided over by the Duke of Argyll, and one of the most conspicuous figures was Champion Piper J. McColl, who, as shown in the accompanying picture, wore numerous medals awarded him in the many pipe playing contests in which he has been victorious. The bagpipe is an instrument which dates back into remote antiquity, but there are various forms of it, and that in use in the highlands of Scotland has become so identified with the Scotch as to be considered a national instrument. The highland pipe is quite different from the Irish variety. It is very powerful and calls for great exertion of the lungs in forcing the air into the bag.

It is supposed that the bagpipe was introduced into Scotland by the Norsemen. It was common in England from Anglo-Saxon times and is familiarly referred to by Chaucer and Shakespeare. Representations of a similar instrument are found in Greek sculptures.

KIDNEY DISEASE CURED

A Typical Letter to Dr. David Kennedy's Son About Dr. Kennedy's NEW Medicine, Cal-cura Solvent.

Gilbert F. Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., makes public the following letter from one of the most prominent men in Utica, N.Y., but who does not wish his name used publicly:

My Dear Sir: I received a sample bottle of Dr. Kennedy's new medicine, Cal-cura Solvent, a few months ago. I was greatly pleased with it, and decided to try a large bottle. I therefore purchased three bottles of Mr. Sheehan, and I am pleased to inform you that I have been greatly benefited by it and consider myself cured. If my kidney trouble ever asserts itself again (and I am sure it will not) I will not hesitate to continue the use of this grand medicine. I wish you would send some samples to the parties on the enclosed list. All are suffering from kidney trouble. Yours very truly,

A Fortune In His Legs.

During the reign of Queen Elizabeth an English gentleman of wealth named Corbet, of a distinguished family near Shrewsbury, bet that his leg was the handsomest in the country or kingdom and staked estates worth £80,000 on the subject. He won the wager, and a picture is still preserved in the family mansion representing the process of measuring the legs of the different contestants.

Not Encouraging.

"But," said the persistent suitor, "if I were to prove to you that I would go to the ends of the earth for you"—

HAY FEVER

DIVERS' PARALYSIS.

This Disease Affects Its Victims Only Out of Water.

"Diver's paralysis," said the second mate, "proves homeopathy to be a fact. Homeopathy says that like cures like. For instance, if you have a fever take something that produces a fever, and you will recover. Well, divers' paralysis backs up this claim.

"The disease afflicts the pearl divers of Ceylon and the sponge divers of the Mediterranean. It attacks only the best men, the ones who go down deepest and stay longest, and it is supposed to be caused by the swift changes from one pressure of water to another that the diver undergoes when he pops up to the surface.

"This paralysis makes the diver quite helpless out of water. Yet under water it disappears altogether. The water causes divers' paralysis. The water in a truly homeopathic manner takes every vestige of the disease away.

"To the oyster beds of Ceylon and to the sponge fisheries of the Mediterranean many of the best divers are carried like infants. Helpless as logs, they lie in a row on the decks in the sunshine till their turn comes to descend. Then in Ceylon the pearl diver is carried to the boat's edge. He sits there, his hands on his knees, as if lost in thought (he is getting his breath), and suddenly—pop—he rolls awkwardly into the water. And the instant he disappears all his agility returns to him, and as easily as a boy would dive five feet after a white stone he dives over a hundred feet after the hidden pearls.

"With the paralyzed sponge diver it is the same story. Only, since he holds a heavy stone in his arms to bear him down to the bottom, he must be carried to the boat's side and dropped over bodily.

"These paralytics are like fish—awkward, helpless, flopping hideously about the deck, but the moment you toss them overboard away they dart, quick, graceful, dolphin-like."—New York Herald.

Faith Not Necessary.

You may be just as skeptical and pessimistic as you please. Kodol will digest what you eat whether you eat or not. You can put your food in a bowl, pour a little Kodol Dyspepsia Cure on it and it will digest it the same as it will in your stomach. It can't help but cure indigestion and dyspepsia. It is curing hundreds and thousands—some had faith and some didn't. Kodol will cure you if medicine can cure you, whether you have faith in it or not. Mrs. J. P. Bailey, Waugh, Va., says: "I am 81 years old. Several years I suffered extremely with indigestion and dyspepsia. My grandson, A. Baily, Jr., a merchant at Allwood, Va., sent me a bottle of Kodol Despepsia Cure. The world ought to know of the supreme benefits an aged sufferer has received from this great medicine. It entirely cured me and can eat all food." Sold by H. C. Giesler and G. T. Boyington.

Prevention Better Than Cure.

In these days, when most medical men are on the still hunt for miraculous cures, specifics in one or other form, it is easy to lose sight of, at least to fail to give sufficient attention to, the matter of the cause or causes of disease and of the means of prevention as well as of the really scientific because so often simple measures calculated so to help nature as to enable her to successfully perform a cure.

We all remember how the profession ransacked the entire earth for some medicament that should "cure" scurvy. No better illustration of what good old Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes declared to be shameful to the profession could be given than the various "treatments" for scurvy till some thoughtful layman discovered the true cause of the disease to be lack of vegetable food. A rational supply of vegetables or fruit and fruit juices and a diminished ration of salt meat sufficed to render all the armies, navies and camp dwellers of the world "immune."—Health Culture.

Make a note now to get Ely's Cream Balm if you are troubled with nasal catarrh, hay fever or cold in the head. It is purifying and soothing to the sensitive membranes that line the air-passages. It is made to cure the disease, not to fool the patient by a short, deceptive relief. There is no cocaine nor mercury in it. Do not be talked into taking a substitute for Ely's Cream Balm. All druggists sell it. Price 50 cents. Mailed by Ely Bros., 56 Warren street, New York.

Louis the Great's Size.

Louis the Great had even and tolerably regular features without any strongly marked characteristics. By all his contemporaries he is spoken of as a tall man, but he had a way of raising his head, surmounted by the monstrous wig he wore, and of swelling his chest that created the impression of height, for when the sepulchers of the kings were violated by the convention and his body was dragged out of his coffin it was measured and found a trifle over 5 feet 6 inches.

An Innocent Gambler.

"Cheyenne was a wide open town in the old days, and every hotel and bar had its little faro game and roulette wheel and stud poker game," said a man who was there. "Our party was staying at the Inter Ocean hotel. A long, loose jointed Missourian ambled in one night and butted into the poker game. There were two or three card sharps at the table, and every citizen carried his shooting iron. This long Missourian looked rather easy, but before he had been playing an hour he was $1,500 to the good. John Chase, proprietor of the hotel, became interested and watched the game. In a few moments he saw the Missourian turn a trick that was not strictly according to Hoyle, and he called the Missourian outside.

"'Now, see here,' said Chase, 'I want to warn you. You'd better be pretty careful. Those fellows are all professional gamblers and are armed to the teeth. You don't seem to realize what you're doing.'

"'Say,' replied the long Missourian, with a look of childlike innocence, 'are they cheating me?'"—San Francisco Chronicle.

A Judicious Inquiry.

A well known traveling man who visits the drug trade says he has often heard druggists inquire of customers who asked for a cough medicine, whether it was wanted for a child or an adult, and if for a child they almost invariably recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The reason for this is that they know there is no danger from it and that it always cures. There is not the least danger in giving it, and for coughs, colds and croup, it is unsurpassed. For sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

A Siberian Wonder.

The scientists have for years been perplexed over the wonderful frozen well at Yakutsk, Siberia. As long ago as 1828 it was announced that the ground was frozen to an abnormal depth at the place referred to. In the summer of 1829 a Russian merchant set a gang of men to the task of ascertaining the depth of the frozen stratum. They gave up the job after digging some thirty feet in solidly frozen ground. The Russian Academy of Sciences took the matter in hand and between 1838 and 1844 dug to a depth of 382 feet and then abandoned the shaft because the earth was still frozen as hard as a rock. Natural cold could never penetrate to such a depth, and the phenomenon is still unexplained.

Two Repulsive Pictures.

In the atelier of Adolph William Bouguereau, the great French painter, there hung two terrible pictures. One represented a man dying in the desert, with the frightful form of the angel of death descending upon him. The other depicted Dante and Virgil in hell watching one victim madly gnawing at the throat of another. The two pictures failed because of their horror. "If I had stuck to such subjects as those," the artist used to say, "I should have starved long ago." He found a market for the beautiful.

The Better Way

The tissues of the throat are inflamed and irritated; you cough, and there is more irritation—more coughing. You take a cough mixture and it eases the irritation—for a while. You take and it cures the cold. That's what is necessary. It soothes the throat because it reduces the irritation; cures the cold because it drives out the inflammation; builds up the weakened tissues because it nourishes them back to their natural strength. That's how Scott's Emulsion deals with a sore throat, a cough, a cold, or bronchitis.

WEALTH IN TREES.

Facts About the Forestry Resources of Pacific Coast States.

The forest wealth of Oregon is of vast extent, and in these days, when timber has become so valuable a possession, the fact is an important one. There is one county in Oregon, Coos county, which has 1,300 square miles of forest, upon which there are estimated to be 13,000,000,000 feet of timber, square measure. Most of the output of this county in lumber is fir and spruce, but there is also plenty of white cedar, myrtle and maple, to say nothing of oak, alder, chinquapin, madrona and other hard woods.

There are many interesting scenes in connection with this great lumber industry, especially at this time of year, when the activity in the lumber camps is at its height. In Oregon and Washington the most densely timbered area is west of the Cascade mountain range. This is due to the moisture peculiar to that section, which aids in the rapid and prolific development of plant life. In this forestry belt the Douglas fir predominates and furnishes about 80 per cent of the merchantable timber. Among the larger species of trees is the giant tideland spruce, which grows to marvelous proportions, in many instances assuming a diameter of twenty feet and rising hundreds of feet in height. In cutting the big trees stumps are often left of twelve or fifteen feet in height, because the wood of the lower part of the tree is rough and hard to work. If the stump chances to be hollow all a settler has to do for a home is to roof the stump and cut doors and windows. Sometimes the hollows at the foot of the trees are such that a cart can be driven through them even before the giant lords of the forest are felled to the ground.

A HAPPY MOTHER.

Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., and Her Romance.

Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., though a young woman whose social duties are onerous, is very fond of her children. And well she may be, for it is largely due to them that a reconciliation was effected between her husband and his family after the famous quarrel which occurred because he chose her as his bride. Mrs. Vanderbilt was Miss Grace Wilson, and, although she belonged to a family of wealth and brilliant social connections, the late Cornelius Vanderbilt objected when he learned that his eldest son was going to marry her.

He was so much put out about the match that he changed his will and left the bulk of his fortune to his younger son, Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt. But Cornelius junior has been a success in business, and his wife has made a social success. The couple received especial attentions from Emperor William of Germany and Prince Henry. Meantime the widow of Cornelius Vanderbilt longed to see her son and his little ones, and about two years ago a family reunion was brought about at Newport, to which the young wife and mother was invited, and since then all has been harmony.

"On the Bridge at Midnight."

Klimt and Gazzolo's $10,000 production, "On the Bridge at Midnight," is among the local bookings to be seen here on this Saturday evening, Oct. 28, at Stephens Opera House. This is the successful comedy-drama that contains a reproduction of Chicago's most celebrated feat of modern engineering—the lift or jackknife bridge over the Chicago River. Even experts in engineering doubted that this huge novelty would be a success but its perfect practicability silenced them and likewise Klimt and Gazzolo silenced doubters who heard of their determination to introduce a working model of the bridge in a play. The stage bridge works as perfectly as the original, and opening and closing as a steamer passes, makes one of the greatest stage effects and achievements of the modern stage. It took twenty men five months to build this bridge scene alone for "On the Bridge at Midnight," but their work and the plans of the producers were so perfect that the scene passed without a hitch the opening night in Chicago and of course aroused the greatest enthusiasm. The entire river view, including the bridge, is a masterpiece of scene painting and construction. As the two huge sections of the roadway, the halves of the jackknife rise to let a steamer pass, audiences never fail to bestow tremendous applause. Much of this is of course due to the development of the deeply interesting story of [illegible] at this point, the story of the [illegible] search of a blind mother for [illegible] stolen when a baby. There are several immensely funny characters played by well known comedians and the rest of the company is fully equiped and equal to the many demands of unusual comedy-drama. While it is a strong play and scenically impressive, all sensational melodrama exaggeration is avoided.

BOWENS CORNERS.

Charles W. Alright of Granby came near being homeless last week as his house caught fire from a burning chimney. He succeeded, with the aid of neighbors and friends, in extinguishing the fire having plenty of water and ladders handy. The house was insured in Patrons of Industry Fire Insurance Company whose adjuster with Agent Palmer were on hand on Monday of this week giving Mr. Alright the cash for all damage sustained. People should examine and clean pipes and chimneys at this time of the year.

It was decided at the last meeting of Welcome Association, P. of I., to hold their next meeting on Tuesday evening, Oct. 31. It has been suggested by some that they have a Hallow'een supper at that time as a farewell to Brother Arnold and wife who give possession of hall and store at that time to Williams & Sharp. It is earnestly requested that all members be present on that night, especially those who have insurance in the company as there is important business to come before the meeting. Secretary Keeney moves to Fulton this week and wishes the Association to elect another in his place.

Some of the directors of the Patrons Telephone company have telephones installed and are helloing each other night and day.

I was troubled this way for about three months, when I used Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets, and received immediate relief," says John Dixon, Tullamore, Ontario, Canada. For sale by H. C. Giesler druggist.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY WILLIAM B. BAKER

A Record of Which He Has No Reason to Be Ashamed—Conscientious and Hard-working Official.

The TIMES is again pleased to call attention to District Attorney Baker and the admirable record he has made since assuming the exacting duties of the office he now holds and to which the Republican party has honored him with a renomination.

During Mr. Baker's term now drawing to a close he has had more real serious work to contend with than any other District Attorney for a good many years. When he took office the case of Frank White was in the Court of Appeals, and his conviction for murder in the first degree was affirmed.

Mr. Baker has never employed, nor has he had the county employ counsel to assist him in any of the cases tried, but did all of the trial work himself, except an occasional case of minor importance, which the assistant District Attorney has tried, but even then Mr. Baker was present.

According to the record in the County Clerk's office, eighty-four persons indicted have been convicted and only four have been acquitted—one of which was directed by the court because of insufficient proof.

The convictions include the trial of Anthony Taldeboni for murder in the first degree, but who was convicted of manslaughter in the first degree.

When Henry W. Manzer was arrested for his fiendish crime, Mr. Baker advised that he be placed in solitary confinement, with the result that he made a full confession, May 31. In compliance with a telegram immediately sent to Governor Higgins, an extraordinary term of the Supreme Court was called, Judge Stowell in the meanwhile calling a special Grand Jury, with an extra term of the County Court for June 30 at Oswego. The case was presented on that day and an indictment was found and sent to the Supreme Court for trial. On July 10 Manzer was arraigned and counsel assigned, and on July 17 began one of the most celebrated trials noted in our criminal jurisprudence. The defense of insanity, always dangerous, was interposed and eminent alienists were employed to assist Manzer's attorneys in their effort to save him from the legitimate consequences of his crime. The trial entailed an enormous amount of work and study on the part of the District Attorney to meet the issue, as the burden of proof rests with the people. In two months and six days from the commission of the crime the defendant was executed.

In the Battles case no criticism is due the District Attorney's office. The case was duly presented with every vestige of evidence obtainable, but it was rumored that three out of twenty-three Grand Jurors were for indictment. Then, before the District Attorney had an opportunity to act—before the next Grand Jury had been organized—fourteen Democratic lawyers, for political purposes, headed by Recorder Bulger, the avowed political enemy of the present District Attorney, in a spectacular manner, asked for an order compelling the District Attorney to again present the case. The District Attorney had decided to pursue such a course prior to such action. At the proper time, and with some new evidence secured by him after months of work, he presented the case to the last Grand Jury, and an indictment for murder in the second degree was found by that body.

It is neither fair nor honest, in face of this record of things accomplished, to declare, as certain cheap newspapers and thrashy circulars are attempting to do, that the present administration of the District Attorney's office is weak, corrupt and without results.

The record also upon violations of the Liquor Tax law shows that in every case of complaint made indictments have been found, defendants convicted and sentence pronounced—not one acquitted. We understand there is one exception—the defendant died before an indictment could be found.

Let the lovers of good government, of the proper enforcement of our laws—of an honest, impartial and fearless administration of the District Attorneys office—determine whether it is better to pay attention to the whining of dishonest and time-serving politicians, or to vote to retain in office a man who has the record of discharging his duty fearlessly and conscientiously.

ELECTORS OF THE CITY OF FULTON

Grave Crisis Pending—Do Not Place Your City's Interests in Hands Unfit to Guide Them.

Electors, a crisis, pregnant with vital import to every man, woman and child within the limits of the city, confronts you, and your vote will decide for the next two years whether Fulton shall be a city of shame or a city of honor—a city at the mercy of soulless corporations, or a city whose interests shall be safe-guarded by honorable, clean-cut business men upon whose integrity no shadow or blemish lies. A stream cannot rise higher than its source, nor can a municipality rise above the status of its governors. Let us then take earnest thought lest we give our infant city into the hands that are wholly unfit to guide and guard her.

In the course of progressive events Fulton must have a trolley line, and the next Mayor, his Board of Public Works, and the Common Council will have all to do with the granting of a franchise. It will be for them to protect the interests of the taxpayer or the corporation which seeks the franchise.

Corporations and syndicates do not invest their capital where they do not expect it to earn a fair percentage. The money which it is alleged will be used in Fulton on Tuesday for the purpose of carrying the city will be taken from your pockets later, with the percentage added. No man who holds stock in a corporation will permit his civic pride to leave the interests of his partners unprotected.

Have you so much that you can afford to give away a franchise worth thousands of dollars?

Can you afford to build a new upper bridge within a year for the benefit of a corporation now intent upon selecting your next city officials?

Let the trolley come to Fulton, but let the city officials and the trolley magnates not be one and the same. The loss will be yours if they are.

Look well to it where you place your mark upon the ballot next Tuesday. True Republicanism stands always for purity and protection to city and home, and like a torch, the more it is shaken in the hands of the people the more brightly it will burn.

LOYAL FRIEND; COURAGEOUS FOE

Hon. T. D. Lewis Has Always Protected the Interests of His Constituents—Not Candidate of Any Faction.

The Hon. T. D. Lewis's record, as the guardian of your interests in the Assembly, is the strongest plea to the electors of this district for their vote. Has he ever neglected, even for an instant, to safe-guard them? Has he ever slumbered at his post or permitted self-interest to take precedence over your interests? You appreciated him last Fall by giving him in this district a majority of six over that received by the Roosevelt electors.

He manfully fought for and secured the Barge Canal for this district.

He alone was instrumental in securing legislation to preserve and increase the water-power in the Oswego River.

Any one of the inestimable privileges obtained for this district entitles him to re-election, while the sum total he has been instrumental in securing should give him a life claim upon your gratitude and support.

Mr. Lewis is not the candidate of any faction and is most stubbornly opposed to factionalism. His is the Republicanism of McKinley and Roosevelt, and it is upon their broad platform that he uncompromisingly stands. "A square deal for every man," he demands, and for that reason you have approved him and will approve him again on Tuesday next by a larger majority than ever before. You know that he is a loyal friend and a courageous foe—and that neither cajolery nor coercion can cause him to waver in his allegiance to all that makes for the best for the First Assembly District of Oswego county.

ALDERMANIC CANDIDATES.

The nominees for Aldermen in the several wards on the Republican ticket are as follows:

First Ward—Frank Lamson.
Second Ward—William Osborn.
Third Ward—Charles R. Bennett.
Fourth Ward—Frank B. Dilts.
Fifth Ward—H. A. MacFarland.
Sixth Ward—George J. Foster.

The foregoing will be staunchly loyal to the city's interests. Republicans do your duty next Tuesday; these candidates are pledged to do their duty when elected.

FOR SUPERVISORS.

First and Sixth Wards—Harry L. Platt.
Second and Third Wards—George R. Simons.
Fourth and Fifth Wards—George E. Simons.

These are the Republican nominees. They have been life-long residents of Fulton and their records are as open books which all may scan. They are making an active canvass for votes, and their friends are confident of their election on Tuesday.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

An adjourned quarterly meeting of the Chamber of Commerce was held last Friday evening in the City Hall. There was a good attendance of members when President Redhead called the assemblage to order.

After the reading and adoption of the minutes of the previous session, Mr. Redhead stated that negotiations were pending between a western manufacturing concern and the officials of the Chamber with a view of locating an eastern branch in Fulton.

A letter had been received from one of the principal owners, outlining a proposition for approval and acceptance. The proposition embraced a building with at least 20,000 feet of floor space and from 22 to 24 feet high.

Contractor D. E. Wadsworth, by request of Secretary Whitaker, furnished a rough estimate of the cost of such a building. It would be 200x50 feet, of heavy mill construction throughout, with concrete lower floor, 124 windows, etc., and the cost would be $8,316.30.

An informal discussion followed regarding a site.

A resolution was introduced by Mr. B. W. Bennett, and adopted, that the chair appoint a committee with power to act, and the following committee was selected: Messrs. Thomas Hunter, B. W. Bennett and Verner W. Shattuck.

An "Old Home" week for Fulton was discussed, in commemoration of Volney's centennial anniversary, which it was thought should be fittingly celebrated next June. The following committee was selected to confer with the Volney officials and ascertain their wishes in the matter, also to obtain data and other necessary information—Messrs. E. R. Redhead, Elmer E. Morrill, John Hunter, J. W. Rigley and W. H. Patterson.

Mr. B. W. Bennett gave a succinct history of the formation of the Fulton Baseball Association and its connection with the Empire State League; the manner in which the city had been advertised through the publication of the scores in all papers outside of New York City, and the clean sport which had been enjoyed by all who witnessed the games. There was a small deficit, Mr. Bennett said, and he asked the Chamber to contribute $50 toward the shortage. This request was cheerfully complied with.

Secretary V. W. Shattuck of the Milk Producers' Association, explained the progress made in the erection of the new building. It would cost, when completed, about $12,000, and he regretted that only half that amount was available. The association was capitalized at $10,000, but the shares had not all been sold. The building would be complete and ready to receive and ship milk on Saturday, Nov. 4, under contract which does not expire until April 1, 1906.

The building is 40x67 feet and is two stories above the basement. The lower floors are of concrete, and the building throughout is constructed with hollow blocks, the window sills and capstones being of the same material. D. E. Wadsworth was the contractor.

Mr. Shattuck asked the Chamber to aid the enterprise.

Secretary Whitaker stated that while the building occupied much less space than the Nestle Food Company's plant, the Milk Producers' Association would bring into the city and disburse practically the same amount of cash, as the product would be paid for by check upon a local bank every two weeks.

President Redhead was equally emphatic in his endorsement of the work accomplished by the association.

A motion was introduced by Mr. B. W. Bennett, and adopted, that the Chamber indorse the work of the association and aid by circular letter the selling of the stock to those whom the association desired to interest. In the meanwhile Secretary Shattuck was urged to push the sale of the stock among the producers themselves.

Special Franchises.

The total valuation of special franchises in New York State, fixed by the Board of Tax Commissioners, is $356,829,550 as compared with $302,688,757 a year ago. The towns of the county have a valuation this year of $105,106 in franchises, as against $99,525 a year ago. The city of Fulton shows a valuation this year of $368,260, as against $349,160 a year ago. The total valuation of franchises in Oswego county is $944,016.

AMUSEMENTS.

Daniel L. Hart, who is a young newspaper man of Wilkes Barre, has come into prominence as a dramatist by writing a brilliant domestic play, "The Parish Priest," and a new war piece, "Marching Through Georgia." In collaboration with C. E. Callahan, author of "Coon Hollow" and "Fogg's Ferry," Mr. Hart has written a story of the coal regions of Pennsylvania, called "Slaves of the Mine," which is to be presented at the Stephens Opera House, Saturday night. It is said to have all the delicate humor, brilliant dialogue and natural character drawing which characterize "The Parish Priest" joined to an exciting plot. The scenery and effects are elaborate, and were designed by Frank Platzer, the well known New York artist. A capable company will present the play, together with the introduction of appropriate specialties. Prices 25, 35 and 50 cents. Seats now on sale at Watson's or Pollard's.

Board of Public Works.

Bids have been requested on one boat load of 250 tons bituminous coal to be delivered at the dock at the pumping station before the close of navigation.

The following estimates will be presented to the Common Council as the amounts necessary to defray the expenses of the board for the year 1906: Improvement fund, $3,000; sidewalk fund, $2,500; sewer fund, $1,000; public works fund, $2,500; painting fund for work of painting lower bridge, $500; light fund, $8,000.

Board of Fire and Police.

The Fire and Police Board at a meeting held on Monday evening, estimated the following amounts as necessary for expenditure next year: Police department, $6,070; Fire department, $6,350. These figures will be submitted to the Common Council at its next meeting.

The amounts are proportioned as follows:

Fire department—Salaries of firemen, $3,840; salaries of two chiefs, $300; salaries of callmen, $480; fuel, $50; plumbing, $50; laundry, $75; repairs and apparatus, $100; electric lines, $200; telephone, $30; surgeon, $75; incidentals, $100; painting hose house, $200; horse feed and shoeing, $500; hose, new, $350. Total, $6,350.

Police department—Salaries, $4,620; judge, $800; janitor, $150; fuel, $75; rental West side station, $100; patrol, $100; feeding prisoners, $75; incidentals, $150; two new patrolmen, six months, $445. Total, $6,070.

Milk Producers Association.

On Saturday morning, Nov. 4, the Fulton Milk Producers Association will be ready to receive milk at their plant in Second street. The first milk train to start from the new plant will leave on Sunday morning at 9:45 o'clock, and several Ontario & Western railroad officials will accompany it. Each morning thereafter at 9:45 o'clock a train will leave the plant. This industry means much to the farmers of this section and to Fulton as well, and too much credit cannot be given the public spirited men who have labored so faithfully to foster the project and aid Fulton.

Sacred Keys.

Every person's feelings have a front door and a side door by which they may be entered. The front door is on the street. Some keep it always open, some keep it latched, some locked, some bolted with a chain that will let you peep in, but not get in, and some nail it up, so that nothing can pass its threshold. This front door leads into a passage which opens into an anteroom, and this into the interior apartments. The side door opens at once into the secret chamber. There is almost always one key to the side door. This is carried for years hidden in a mother's bosom. Fathers, brothers, sisters and friends often, but by no means so universally, have duplicates of it. The wedding ring conveys a right to one. Alas, if none is given with it! Be very careful to whom you trust one of these keys of the side door.—O. W. Holmes.

Some Boston Boasts.

"The Hotel Pelham was the first French apartment house, or flat, as they have now come to call them, to be opened in the United States," said an old Bostonian. "At that time the late Dr. Dix, who owned the property, had returned from a European trip, where he got the idea. Upon his return he brought it with him, the Pelham was fitted up in that way, and the idea has continued to spread until it has gone all over the country. Another thing that you may have forgotten is the fact that the Parker House was the first hotel in the United States to be conducted on the European plan. It was in a Boston hotel, the American or the Revere—I forget just which one it was—that the elevator was first introduced."—Boston Record.

The Echoes of Eagle's Nest.

The most wonderful echo in the known world is that heard from the Eagle's Nest in the lake regions of Ireland. The rock known as "Eagle's Nest" is the most prominent peak to be found among the heights that surround the Killarney lakes. Its apex is 1,250 feet above the surface of the water, and the extraordinary echo is heard to the best advantage from a spot 100 feet to the west from an opening called the Devil's mouth. At that point the effect of the re-echoed sounds is absolutely startling, the slightest whisper being repeated as often as 1,000 times. The rebound is always clear and distinct and appears to come from the crags, cliffs and peaks which surround the experimenter on all sides.

Expected the Usual Results.

At provincial theaters in France when opera is given it is not uncommon for untried tenors to submit themselves to the public judgment, which is usually hostile. One of these obscure songsters presented himself and sung the first act. He did not make a "hit." He retired to his dressing room, took off his makeup and was preparing to go home when the manager appeared. "What!" he cried. "You are not dressed for the second act, and the curtain is just going up! Thousand thunders!" "The second act?" said the tenor placidly. "I cannot sing the second act. I don't know the second act. Whenever I sing I am always kicked out after the first!"

Odd Idea of Eclipses.

The Nanpes, a tribe in South America, have an original explanation of the cause of eclipses. It is a quarrel, they declare, between the sun and the moon, and to dissuade these combatants from fighting their duel to the death they shout their very loudest till returning light is proof to them that the heavenly bodies, paying heed to their anger, have thought better of their intention.

A Girl of Another Sort.

American girls are often accused of domineering over their parents and living pretty much as they please. An entertaining instance of the reverse of this is found in "Nuts to crack and Mary Ellen," a story by Eleanor H. Porter in the November Lippencott's. Mary Ellen's final declaration of independence comes as an unexpected climax.

An Unusual Election Story.

With election fever at its height a good story bearing on the subject is sure to find a wide appeal among men that vote and women that would—or would not—like to. Such a one is that called "Spatters's Campaign," in the November Lippencott's, by Sarah Comstock. In it a candidate for Governor of California is elected through the efforts of his small son, who declares he "intends to be the Governor's son or bust."

The River Jordan.

Concerning that unique stream, the river Jordan, Dr. Libbey, in "The Jordan Valley and Petra," writes: "Perhaps the strangest thing about this famous river is what none of the ancients ever guessed—that its course was mostly below the level of the sea. They journeyed up and down the valley since before the days of Abraham; they climbed down the roads from Jerusalem to Jericho and up into Moab and Edom; they built roads east and west of the Jordan; they built roads and bridges and cities far below the level of the Mediterranean and yet never seem to have suspected that this stream differed from most of the rivers of the globe in this respect. Greeks, Romans and Mohammedans, Jews, Christians and crusaders knew every nook and cranny of its winding course, but failed to realize that while its head and source rested high on noble Hermon's side its mouth in the Dead sea was far below the surface of the habitable world and all the surrounding oceans."

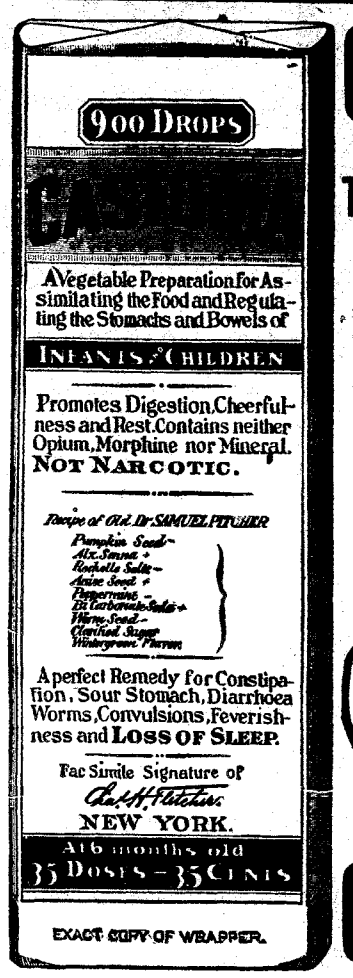
Tinted Lungs.



One of the exhibits in an English anatomical museum is a collection of three lungs preserved in alcohol. On one hand is an exhibit almost pure white, while the third is jet black, the one between being a dirty gray.

The first was taken from an Eskimo who all his life had inhaled the pure air of his northern home. The black was taken from a miner who had spent years in the production of coal. The third was from the body of a London man, and the tint was produced by the inhalation of the soot carried in the air.

It is a certain fact that the lungs of the miner were in a more healthy state than those of the city dweller, since the grit in his tissues was pure coal dust, while the discoloration of the other was due not alone to soot, but to the dust of a city's streets composed of a thousand and one deleterious elements.

The Skipper's Comment.

A burly, thick headed skipper had been given the command of a little steam collier. Going up with great pride on to the bridge of his new ship, the first thing that caught his eye was the engine room telegraph. "What's that for?" he demanded. "Why, that goes down to the engine room," was the reply. "You see all the orders on it—'Full speed, 'Half,' 'Slow,' 'Stop.' You just have to move the handle." The old man was charmed. "If Aa put the handle to 'Full,' will she gang full speed?" "Why, certainly." "An' if Aa put the handle to 'Stop,' will she stop ganging?" "Certainly." The old man was still more charmed. Finally, after thinking some time, he heaved a great sigh of pleasure. "Why, that's fine, man! That's clever! That does away with all them saucy imps o' engineers!"

CONCURRENT RESOLUTIONS, 1905.

STATE OF NEW YORK, OFFICE OF THE Secretary of State, Albany, July 25, 1905.—Pursuant to the provisions of section one of article fourteen of the Constitution of the State of New York, and section seven of chapter nine hundred and nine of the Laws of eighteen hundred and ninety-six, notice is hereby given that the following proposed amendment to section ten of article eight of the Constitution of the State of New York is to be submitted to the people for approval at the next General Election in this State to be held on the seventh day of November, nineteen hundred and five, and is published once a week for three months next preceding such General Election in conformity with the aforesaid provisions. JOHN F. O'BRIEN, Secretary of State.

AMENDMENT NUMBER ONE.

Concurrent Resolution of the Senate and Assembly, proposing an amendment to section ten of article eight of the constitution, relating to the limitation of indebtedness of counties, cities, towns and villages by excepting the city of New York from the provisions of said section after the first day of January, nineteen hundred and four.

Whereas, The legislature at its regular session in nineteen hundred and one duly adopted a resolution providing for an amendment to the constitution relating to the limitation of indebtedness of counties, cities, towns and villages, by excepting the city of New York from the provisions of said section after the first day of January, nineteen hundred and four; and Whereas, Such resolution has been duly published in accordance with law and the constitution and referred to this legislature for action, therefore: Section 1. Resolved (if the assembly concur), That section ten of article eight of the constitution be amended to read as follows: Article VIII. § 10. No county, city, town or village shall hereafter give any money or property, or loan its money or credit to or in aid of any individual, association or corporation, or become directly or indirectly the owner of stock in, or bonds of, any association or corporation; nor shall any such county, city, town or village be allowed to incur any indebtedness except for county, city or town or village purposes. This section shall not prevent such county, city, town or village from making such provision for the aid or support of its poor as may be authorized by law. No county or city shall be allowed to become indebted for any purpose or in any manner to an amount which, including existing indebtedness, shall exceed ten per centum of the assessed valuation of the real estate of such county or city subject to taxation, as it appeared by the assessment rolls of said county or city on the last assessment for state or county taxes prior to the incurring of such indebtedness; and all indebtedness in excess of such limitation, except such as now may exist, shall be absolutely void, except as herein otherwise provided. No county or city whose present indebtedness exceeds ten per centum of the assessed valuation of its real estate subject to taxation, shall be allowed to become indebted in any further amount until such indebtedness shall be reduced within such limit. This section shall not be construed to prevent the issuing of certificates of indebtedness or revenue bonds issued in anticipation of the collection of taxes, which are not retired within five years after their date of issue, and bonds issued to provide for the supply of water, and any debt hereafter incurred by any portion or part of a city, if there shall be any such debt, shall be included in ascertaining the power of the city to become otherwise indebted; except that debts incurred by the city of New York after the first day of January, nineteen hundred and four, to provide for the supply of water shall not be so included. Whenever the boundaries of any city are the same as those of a county, or when any city shall include within its boundaries more than one county, the power of any county wholly included within such city to become indebted shall cease, but the debt of the county, heretofore existing, shall not, for the purposes of this section, be reckoned as a part of the city debt. The amount hereafter to be raised by tax for county or city purposes, in any county containing a city of over one hundred thousand inhabitants, or any such city of this state, in addition to providing for the principal and interest of existing debt, shall not in the aggregate exceed in any one year two per centum of the assessed valuation of the real and personal estate of such county or city, to be ascertained as prescribed in this section in respect to county or city debt. § 2. Resolved (if the assembly concur), that the foregoing amendment be submitted to the people for approval at the general election to be held in the year nineteen hundred and five in accordance with the provisions of the election law.

State of New York, In Senate, Apr. 17, 1903.—This resolution was duly passed, a majority of all the Senators elected voting in favor thereof. By order of the Senate, J. RAINES, Temporary President.

State of New York, In Assembly, Apr. 23, 1903.—This resolution was duly passed, a majority of all the members elected to the Assembly voting in favor thereof. By order of the Assembly, S. F. NIXON, Speaker.

State of New York, Office of the Secretary of State, ss.: I have compared the preceding copy of concurrent resolution, proposing an amendment to section ten of article eight of the Constitution, with the original concurrent resolution on file in this office, and I do hereby certify that the same is a correct transcript therefrom, and of the whole thereof. Given under my hand and the seal of office of the Secretary of State at the city of Albany, this twenty-fifth day of July, in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and five. [L. S.] JOHN F. O'BRIEN, Secretary of State.

Form For Submission of Amendment Number One.—Shall the proposed amendment to section ten of article eight of the Constitution, relating to the limitation of indebtedness of counties, cities, towns and villages, by excepting the city of New York from the provisions of said section after the first day of January, nineteen hundred and four, be approved?

They Tell a Different Story.

There are peculiarities of our English language which no other language exhibits. Did you ever notice how many English words are formed by simply dropping alternate letters—for example, wheat, beat, eat, at; sham, ham, am; wheel, heel, eel; whale, hale, ale, and scores of others?

Again, we have in our mother tongue two words which, joined together, make a distinct word of an entirely different meaning, just as a single word disjointed does. Take the words "since" and "rely" and the separate word "sincerely." To illustrate:

Your letter came, in words that tempt me dearly.
You wrote them, sweet, most truly and sincerely.
For praise like that heroes might gladly die,
But on another's love you since rely.

The Final Blow.

It is said that often when a woman says "no" she means "yes," but there are signs which discourage even the most hopeful and persistent wooer.

"I didn't so much mind Hetty's saying she'd as soon marry a jumping jack as me," said Ethan Hatch forlornly to a sympathetic friend, "nor I didn't much care when she said she'd rather stay at home than go out to Jordan's park with such a slow coach as I was, but when she told me she'd got to help her mother iron when I asked her to go with me down to the Center for some ice cream soda I saw 'twasn't much use hanging on any longer."

Bryant.

Bryant always thought he could write much better poetry than that contained in his "Thanatopsis," which was one of his earliest. During his later days he on several occasions expressed some surprise at the preference shown by his admirers for this particular poem, "when I have done so many things better." He believed the translations of Homer to be the best work he ever did.

A quaint custom practiced by Chinese mothers when a child is restless and does not sleep is to write the following verse and pin a copy of it on each of the four corners of the house, that the passersby may read and the child find rest. Literally translated the verse reads:

Brilliant sparkling earth,
In my house there is a child who cries at night.
The gentlemen coming from the four quarters behold
Peaceful sleep till break of day.

Concurrent Resolution of the Senate and Assembly, proposing an amendment to section two of article six of the constitution in relation to justices of the appellate division of the supreme court. Whereas, The legislature at its regular session in nineteen hundred and four duly adopted a resolution, proposing an amendment to section two of article six of the constitution, in relation to justices of the appellate division of the supreme court; and Whereas, Such resolution has been duly published in accordance with law and the constitution, and referred to this legislature for action; therefore: Section 1. Resolved (if the assembly concur), That section two of article six of the constitution be amended to read as follows: Article VI. § 2. The legislature shall divide the state into four judicial departments. The first department shall consist of the county of New York; the others shall be bounded by county lines, and be compact and equal in population as nearly as may be. Once every ten years the legislature may alter the judicial departments, but without increasing the number thereof. There shall be an appellate division of the supreme court, consisting of seven justices in the first department, and of five justices in each of the other departments. In each department four shall constitute a quorum, and the concurrence of three shall be necessary to a decision. No more than five justices shall sit in any case. From all the justices elected to the supreme court the governor shall designate those who shall constitute the appellate division in each department; and he shall designate the presiding justice thereof, who shall act as such during his term of office, and shall be a resident of the department. The other justices shall be designated for terms of five years or the unexpired portions of their respective terms of office, if less than five years. From time to time as the terms of such designations expire, or vacancies occur, he shall make new designations. A majority of the justices so designated to sit in the appellate division, in each department shall be residents of the department. He may also make temporary designations in case of the absence or inability to act of any justice in the appellate division, or in case the presiding justice of any appellate division shall certify to him that one or more additional justices are needed for the speedy disposition of the business before it. Whenever the appellate division in any department shall be unable to dispose of its business within a reasonable time, a majority of the presiding justices of the several departments at a meeting called by the presiding justice of the department in arrears may transfer any pending appeals from such department to any other department for hearing and determination. No justice of the appellate division shall, within the department to which he may be designated to perform the duties of an appellate justice, exercise any of the powers of a justice of the supreme court, other than those of a justice out of court, and those pertaining to the appellate division, or to the hearing and decision of motions submitted by consent of counsel, but any such justice, when not actually engaged in performing the duties of such appellate justice in the department to which he is designated, may hold any term of the supreme court and exercise any of the powers of a justice of the supreme court in any county or judicial district in any other department of the state. From and after the last day of December, eighteen hundred and ninety-five, the appellate division shall have the jurisdiction now exercised by the supreme court at its general terms and by the general terms of the court of common pleas for the city and county of New York, the superior court of the city of New York, the superior court of Buffalo and the city of Brooklyn, and such additional jurisdiction as may be conferred by the legislature. It shall have power to appoint and remove a reporter. The justices of the appellate division in each department shall have power to fix the times and places for holding special terms therein, and to assign the justices in the departments to hold such terms; or to make rules therefor. § 2. Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the foregoing amendment be submitted to the people for approval at the general election to be held in the year nineteen hundred and five in accordance with the provisions of the election law.

Michael Angelo's Vow.

The story is told, but with no solid foundation, that Raphael had undertaken to decorate the walls of the mansion of Cardinal Farnesina, on the banks of the Tiber, on the condition that no one should see his work until it was completed. Michael Angelo took an oath that he would stop this work. Finding his opportunity when the artist came late to work and disguised as a seller of cakes and wine, he distracted the attention of those round the scaffold that was prepared by offering to them his wares, and, ascending, he drew upon the wall a gigantic head of Jupiter and hurriedly left the building, his vow thus accomplished. When Raphael presently came he exclaimed on seeing the like, "Michael Angelo!" and left the place never to return.

Marriage of the Adriatic.

"The marriage of the Adriatic" was instituted in commemoration of a naval victory won by Sebastian Ziavi, Doge of Venice, over Otto, son of Frederick Barbarossa, 1174. In consequence of this victory Pope Alexander III., who had been driven to take refuge in Venice, gave to the doge the sovereignty of the sea, and every year the doge used to go in grand procession in his state barge and throw a gold ring into the Adriatic, saying, "With this ring I thee wed." Flowers were then thrown into the sea, and the procession returned. The sentence delivered by the doge on the occasion was literally, "Despousamus te mare nostrum in signum veri perpetuique domini."

ALL FOR LOVE.

What a Grand Duke Gave Up to Marry His Cousin.

The story of the Grand Duke Cyril of Russia and the Princess Victoria of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha illustrates the folly of arranging marriages purely for reasons of state. These two are first cousins and were sweethearts in childhood. But the families of the two young people would not consent to their being wed, and Victoria, who is a granddaughter of the late Queen Victoria, was united in marriage to the Grand Duke Ernest of Hesse, brother of the czarina. The grand duke had been in love with the Princess Eleanore of Solms-Hohensolms-Lich, and he yielded reluctantly to the views of his royal relatives, who thought that he should be matched with the Princess Victoria. So it came to pass that as an unwilling bridegroom the Grand Duke Ernest led to the altar the Princess Victoria as a rebellious bride. They quarreled, and a divorce was the outcome. And now the Grand Duke Ernest has married the Princess Eleanore, and his former wife, once the Princess Victoria, has married her sweetheart of old, the Grand Duke Cyril. But Cyril's act has brought upon him the heavy displeasure of the czar. It was thought when he returned from Manchuria, covered with wounds after his miraculous escape from death in the blowing up of the Petropavlovsk, that he would be allowed to marry the woman of his choice without incurring disgrace. But the emperor has shown his strong disapproval of his cousin's course by depriving him of his rank, annulling his commission in the army, stripping him of his uniform, orders and honors and banishing him from Russia. Cyril has accepted his exile, has bought an estate in Coburg and will there live as a country gentleman with his bride.

Stockings of Human Hair.

They were black stockings, thick, stiff, lustrous, and the price mark on them was $15.

"From China," said the dealer—"from northern China. Every family has a few pairs of human hair stockings there. They are worn over the cotton stockings—they are too prickly to be worn next the skin—and, properly treated, they last a lifetime. The Chinese exporter who sold me these stockings said that when a child's hair is shaved in northern China the hair is preserved in a special hair box of lacquer. As soon as the box is full enough the hair is taken from it, and a pair of stockings is woven. Such stockings have a sentimental, almost a religious value, and they are rarely parted with. It would be safe to bet that there are not six other pairs of hair stockings on sale in America."—New York Press.

THERE may be more sheckles for an editor in Oswego county to bow the head and bend the knee to the county political czar, but there is more happiness and manhood in serving the interests of the people and having a free mind in having an independent, unbridled newspaper.—Observer.

Coming from the Observer, the above sentiment is unusually ludicrous. Even the stones in the streets know that Clarence E. Pitts and Charles N. Bulger are the present editors of the Observer and that it is from their pens the stream of vile abuse of the Republicans in Oswego County flows. The Observer is the willing vehicle (for a financial consideration) which conveys the burden of false accusations and base innuendos each week to its readers, against the only party which has ever given the temperance people of the country legislation. The Democracy received its share of the filthy abuse until Charles N. Bulger compelled that party to endorse Clarence E. Pitts for District Attorney, and by that simple act purified itself in the eyes of Mr. Pitts. Since then, not one word of abuse has been hurled at Democracy.

The Observer is a weekly insult to every Republican in Oswego County. It is by far the most intemperate paper published in the county and it is daily receiving the contempt and scorn which it merits. In justice to Mr. Bradt it should be said that he never reads the matter he publishes, which is sent him by Pitts and Bulger, but he must stand sponser for it in the eyes of outraged decency. The question is, how long and for how much, will he continue to act as the catspaw for the double headed combination—Pitts and Bulger?

MARRIED.

Mr. Willis H. Mead of South Granby and Miss Cora Labaugh of Hannibal, were united in marriage on Oct. 15, in Hannibal, by the Rev. F. K. Maunder.

Mr. Frank Morse, formerly of this city, and Miss Eleanor Christy were united in marriage at Colorado Springs on Oct. 8.

DIED.

Alta Bowen, aged 81, died on Tuesday at the home of her son, Mr. W. H. Bowen, No. 412 Broadway. The funeral was held from the late home this afternoon at 1 o'clock and interment will be made at North Volney.

It is with deep regret that we announce the death of Bessie Kimball, aged 30, wife of Mr. Fred Warner of LosAngeles, Cal. Mr. and Mrs Warner and their two sons went to California about a year ago and health and prosperity had attended them until two weeks ago when the wife and mother was stricken with an illness which the doctors thought not serious. A nurse was secured but the patient grew steadily worse and she was taken to the hospital about a week ago. It was impossible to save her life as quick consumption had fastened itself upon her. Death is always sad but it seems especially sad in this case.

The new business in which they embarked a few months since was prospering splendidly. Mr. and Mrs. Warner were gathering around them a choice circle of friends in their new home, and now the great change! It is not known yet what plans the bereaved husband has for the future nor whether he will bring the body to Fulton for interment, but the sympathy of his friends in this city is freely extended him and his sons in their great loss.

Missionary Thank Offering.

The annual Thank Offering meeting of the Women's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies will be held in the State Street M. E. church parlor's on Wednesday of this week at 3 o'clock. The subject to be considered for the afternoon will be Thank Offerings, their origin and object. The members will please remember to bring their thank offerings for the cause of missions. Tea will be served as usual from 6 to 8 o'clock. Gentlemen are invited.

Most Exceptional Values in Dry Goods and Ladies' and Children's Garments

With greater facilities and a much increased selling space we are in better shape than ever before to do justice to our patrons and to ourselves. When we more than doubled our former quarters recently and spent $20,000 in making the new Busy Corner up-to-date and modern in all its appointments, we had not the shadow of a doubt as to the ultimate success of our efforts. Results are proving that we were correct. We've been doing almost double the business of any season in our history. AN ORIGINAL ARTIST.

O. H. von Gottschalck and His Work as Painter and Illustrator.

Oscar Hunt von Gottschalck is one of the pioneers of what some think will prove a new school in art and is author as well as artist. An art exhibition of an unusual kind shortly to be held in New York calls attention to his work, which goes farther than Whistler did in hazy and indistinct effects. In looking at his paintings one sees at first only a blur of color, but out of it gradually vague forms appear—outlines of distant headlands, for instance, and white sails and shifting clouds, with a strange glow behind them. These pictures look as if seen through a mist and have a charm of mystery that grows upon one the more they are studied.

Mr. von Gottschalck has exceptional originality both as artist and writer. The books which he has written and illustrated for youthful readers are really unique. The first of those was "Yankee Doodle Gander," which he described as a "jingo-jingle book." Other works from his brush, pen and pencil are "In Gnome Man's Land," "Lives of the Haunted" and "Historical Sense and Nonsense." Mr. von Gottschalck was born in Providence, R. I., in 1865, studied at the Rhode Island School of Design and at the Art Students' league in New York and for many years has been manager of an art department in New York. He is a son of Dr. W. V. von Gottschalck, who was a friend of Generals Carl Schurz and Franz Sigel and participated with them in the German revolution of 1848. He is a collecter of china and Indian curios and in his home at Hackensack, N. J., has Pueblo pottery, Navajo blankets, Moqui and Pueblo ceremonial dolls and numerous other relics, making up one of the finest private collections in America.

Folk In the Limelight Of Publicity

GENERAL CHARLES W. BARTLETT, Democratic candidate for governor of Massachusetts, is a lawyer of wide reputation who has figured in some famous cases. He was born in Boston in 1845 and is the son of Joseph C. and Katherine A. Bartlett. Much of his youth was spent in the country, where by work on a farm and in other ways he developed a strong physique. He taught school to earn money to aid him in securing a college education and graduated at Dartmouth in 1869. Two years later he graduated from the Albany Law school and began the practice of law. He married Miss Mary L. Morrison, who died, and in 1897 he married Miss Annie M. White. He is a veteran of the civil war and active in the G. A. R. General Bartlett was counsel for the defense in the noted case of Professor Charles R. Eastman of Harvard university, who was charged with the murder of his brother-in-law, Richard H. Grogan. The case excited much attention at the time, and General Bartlett's defense of his client was considered a very able one. In 1901 the Merchants' National bank of Lowell was looted by two of its employees, who afterward retained General Bartlett as their attorney. He saved the institution from wreck by refusing to act for the defaulters until all the money and securities in their possession were returned to the bank.

CHARLES W. BARTLETT.

William Travers Jerome, the aggressive district attorney of New York, is making a unique canvass for re-election. He was elected four years ago as a fusion, or anti-Tammany, nominee. This year he announced that he would stand for re-election as an independent candidate if the number of voters signing the petition for his nomination was sufficient to place his name on the ticket. More than the required number of names was obtained. Meantime it was supposed that he would be indorsed by the fusionists, but the fusion movement fell through. Mr. Jerome had stated that he would not ask support from any party organization, as he did not want to be under any obligation in the performance of his duties, if re-elected, to any man or set of men. It transpired that his candidacy was not indorsed by either the Republicans, Tammany or the Municipal Ownership league, which also put a ticket in the field. Without any kind of a party organization behind him, he is making a warm canvass, and his candidacy furnishes a unique feature in the political annals of the largest city of America.

WILLIAM TRAVERS JEROME.

The father of District Attorney Jerome was the late Lawrence R. Jerome, a great wit and clubman in his day. "Larry," as his friends called him, was a devoted patron of the drama and with a friend was once watching the progress of a real heart thriller of the old days, the plot, of course, revolving about the disposition of a mortgage that threatened to thwart the happiness of the heroine. With the plot at its thickest, the heroine in despair, the villain triumphant and the outlook in every way dark for the persecuted girl as the curtain was descending at the end of the third act, Larry Jerome, with tears rolling down his cheeks, rose from his seat and in most impassioned tones, his voice broken with sobs, but audible all over the house, exclaimed to his companion:

"By heaven, Tom, I'll pay that mortgage myself!"

Then this consummate old joker strolled out into the lobby to enjoy the sensation his remark had created in the audience. The incident helped materially to the making of the play.

Curtis Guild, Jr., Republican nominee for governor of Massachusetts, has served as lieutenant governor of the old Bay State, to which post he was elected in 1902. He is a son of Curtis Guild, founder and editor of the Boston Commercial Bulletin, and was born in Boston in 1860 and graduated in 1881 from Harvard university. He made a tour of Europe and then entered the office of the Commercial Bulletin, where he served from bill collector to editor. Since 1902 he has been sole owner of the paper. In 1892 he married Miss Charlotte H. Johnson. He served in the Spanish war as lieutenant colonel and was inspector general on the staff of General Fitz-Hugh Lee in Cuba. He received the offer of the post of first assistant postmaster general, but declined it.

CURTIS GUILD, JR.

Colonel Guild is a man of many accomplishments and is an excellent speaker. He accompanied Mr. Roosevelt on his stumping tour of the west in 1900. While Colonel Guild was lieutenant governor he was called on to deliver before a prominent Boston organization his lecture on "Weapons of War." There was a large attendance, and the lieutenant governor handled the various weapons with a familiarity that showed he was accustomed to them. As he talked, he showed the weapons, one at a time, and explained when and where they were used. Finally he reached down to the platform and picked up a massive two handled sword and, displaying it, explained its uses and the great destruction that could be wrought with it. "Why," exclaimed the speaker, "an army equipped with this could sweep the globe." As he made this announcement he swung the weapon through the air in a half circle and as he did so swept two globes with it, for there was a crash, and then a smashing of glass, and the remains of two globes from one of the chandeliers lay at the feet of the speaker. A hearty laugh followed, in which the speaker joined. It was a telling exemplification of the truth of his statement.

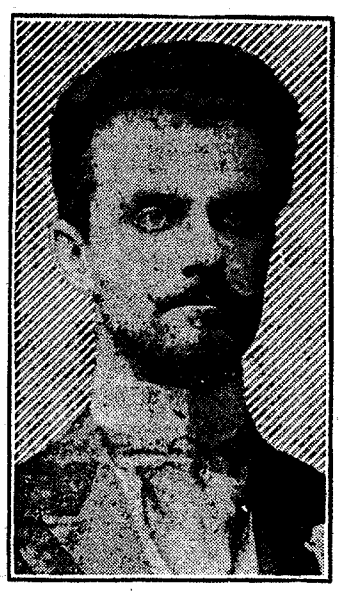
The publication of a new novel by Will N. Harben bearing the title of "Pole Baker" recalls an amusing anecdote related of the author which has a particular significance in this connection. It seems that Pole Baker has a prototype down in Georgia, a mountaineer and ex-moonshiner, distinguished quite as much for his many shooting scrapes as for his droll wit. Mr. Harben, who is always on the lookout for real characters, first drew his portrait in "Abner Daniel," and shortly after the book appeared this mountaineer called on the author at his office in Dalton, Ga. "Look y' heer," he roared; "folks say as you've been a-pokin' fun at me in a book, an' I'm heer to say ef it's true me 'n' you'll hitch pretty quick!" The man's fiery eyes and bulging hip pocket made prompt action advisable. "Very well," said Mr. Harben. "But first you sit down here and read what I said for yourself. Then if you still want satisfaction we'll see what can be done." The mountaineer, taken by surprise, consented. The afternoon had passed before he laid down the book and rose. "Look y' heer," he said, this time sheepishly; "I don't reckon I kin kick. Why, that fellow they say's like me's got a sight more grit 'n I have. Huh!" with rising enthusiasm. "He'd fight a circular saw bare handed. No; I cyan't kick." And, with a pleased grin, he departed.

WILL N. HARBEN.

Collier's Weekly, which is just now conducting a vigorous campaign against so called fraudulent goods which are sometimes imposed upon the public, is published by Peter F. Collier & Son. The senior Collier is well known in the business and social world, and the junior member of the firm, Robert J. Collier, has already given evidence of ability to wear his father's mantle with dignity when the latter is ready to pass it along to a successor. He is a potent factor in the production of the weekly which bears the family name and is the embodiment of enterprise. The elder Collier amassed a fortune in the publishing business, and the son married into a family of wealth and social station. Mrs. Robert J. Collier is a daughter of James J. Van Alen of Newport, who was minister to Italy during the second administration of Grover Cleveland. She is a granddaughter of Mrs. William Astor. The Collier-Van Alen nuptials in the summer of 1902 were a leading topic at the time among the fashionable set at Newport. Among the bride's gifts was a present of about half a million dollars from her father.

ROBERT COLLIER.

The new secretary of state, Elihu Root, has two sons and a daughter. His eldest son, Elihu Root, Jr., is said to look a good deal as the secretary did when he was a college youth. He is twenty-two years of age, has a strong frame, clean cut features and a ruddy countenance betokening abounding health. The father of Secretary Root was a professor of Hamilton college, Clinton, N. Y. The present head of the cabinet graduated there as valedictorian of his class and has always had a warm regard for his alma mater, so when Elihu junior became of proper age he, too, was sent to Hamilton for his college training. In 1904 the young man started out with a fellow collegian and took a tramp of nearly 300 miles through the central portions of New York state. All he took in the way of baggage was a change of underwear in a waterproof wrap. He has tramped in European countries also and says: "My tramping abroad and in my own country has given me an idea of what good, hard work is like, and I can tell you it makes you sympathetic with 'the man with the hoe' and the pickax. I have done a lot of golfing and tennis playing, but physical exercise that is just sport doesn't give you the idea of what hard manual labor is like. But tramping does."



ELIHU ROOT, JR.

Mr. Root and his companion were arrested as tramps by the constable of one place they passed through, but were not kept long in confinement after establishing their identity.

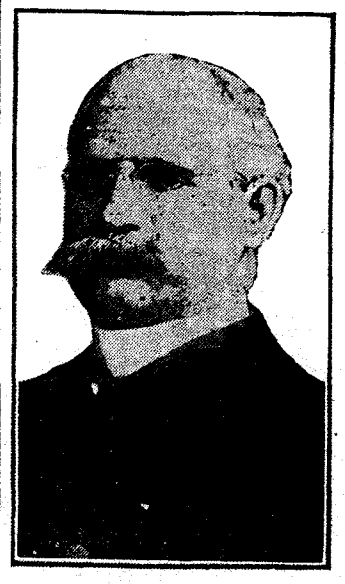
Life Insurance Versus Some Other Salaries

THE large salaries paid by life insurance companies to their officials have been the subject of much discussion in connection with the investigation of insurance matters now in progress. It is interesting to compare the salaries paid some of the men at the head of leading life insurance corporations with the remuneration which men of corresponding ability in other lines of activity obtain. The highest paid public officer in the United States is the president, whose salary of $50,000 a year is only one-third, however, of that received by Richard A. McCurdy as president of the Mutual Life Insurance company. Mr. McCurdy has been in his present position for twenty years, and for a time his yearly compensation was the comparatively moderate sum of $30,000. This was looked upon as fairly generous pay a score of years ago, but as time went on and ideas enlarged as to what a captain of industry or colonel of commerce should receive it was thought fit by the trustees of the Mutual to raise his pay to $100,000 per annum. It continued at this figure until four years ago, when the trustees passed a resolution to recognize his services by increasing his annual salary to $150,000. It was shown in the insurance investigation that in addition to this salary he had made about $28,000 from underwriting syndicate transactions.

John A. McCall as president of the New York Life draws $100,000 per annum. No profits from syndicates were shown in his case. In the Equitable, however, James W. Alexander as president and James H. Hyde as vice president each drew $100,000 per annum in salaries, and Mr. Hyde participated in syndicates, which made his total annual revenue from the company approximate between $125,000 and $130,-

JAMES HAZEN HYDE.

000. Under the new regime in the Equitable participation in syndicates by officers of the company is prohibited. Since Paul Morton became president salaries have been lowered, and he himself draws as head of the company $20,000 less per annum than his predecessor—that is, $80,000. Even this is ten times what he received as secretary of the navy. The difference affords a typical comparison between the salaries paid the principal officers of large business corporations and those paid in the federal, state or municipal service in this country. As second vice president of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railroad Mr. Morton drew a salary several times that which he received as member of the cabinet of the president. Elihu Root in order to accept the $8,000 office of secretary of state gave up a law practice estimated to have yielded him $200,000 per annum and also resigned from corporation directorates which were of pecuniary value to him.



The insurance investigation has shown that some insurance presidents get larger salaries than the presidents of leading railroads. James J. Hill gets $75,000 as president of the Great Northern, and Stuyvesant Fish receives $60,000 as president of the Illinois Central, but such salaries are rare among railroad men, and it is argued that there is less justification for big salaries in the case of insurance companies than in that of railroads, as the wealth of the former is in the nature of trust funds.

Sir Caspar Purdon Clarke, director of the Metropolitan museum, the foremost art institution in America, receives about $15,000 per annum. As the incumbent of a post of corresponding importance in England he received only one-third that amount. The president of Harvard university draws a salary of $10,000, but large salaries are exceptional among college professors, and those familiar with the subject place the average at $2,000. President McCall of the New York Life has two young sons in subordinate positions in his company, one of whom draws as much as Harvard's president and the other $4,000 more. Great Britain pays high officials well, yet Lord Curzon as viceroy of India and governing one-fifth of the world's inhabitants receives $25,000 less per annum than James Hazen Hyde for some years drew as vice president of the Equitable.

SECRETARY METCALF.

Current Events Give Much Importance to His Post.

The question of federal control of corporations doing an interstate business has become one of the most discussed problems of the day since the agitation against railroad rebates began and since the disclosures regarding life insurance companies have created a sentiment in favor of closer supervision of their operations. It is expected that such matters will be taken up at length in the forthcoming annual message of President Roosevelt and in the report of the secretary of commerce and labor, Victor H. Metcalf. Mr. Metcalf believes that the life insurance business should be under some kind of federal supervision and in his report regarding such corporations will make suggestions in this direction. The secretary was a congressman before he was called by Mr. Roosevelt to assume the direction of the department of commerce and labor. He was born in Utica, N. Y., in 1853 and educated at the Utica Free academy, the Russell Military academy at New Haven, Conn., and Yale university. He graduated from the Yale Law school in 1876 and began the practice of law in Utica, but removed to California shortly afterward and later settled at Oakland. In 1898 he was elected to congress and was re-elected in 1900 and 1902. While in the house of representatives he was on the ways and means committee.

ALFONSO'S QUEST.

The Young King of Spain and His Search For a Wife.

Young Alfonso XIII. of Spain is still looking for a bride. His search for a queen has been a topic of interest among royal matchmakers for some time, and his name has been coupled with those of numerous young ladies whose blood is of deep blue tinge. In making a match for a king a great many things have to be taken into consideration that do not enter into the problem in the case of a young man of private station who seeks a wife. The throne of Spain is an ancient one, and, though the monarchy is not so powerful now as it was some centuries ago, the dons naturally want their ruler to mate only with a woman of proud lineage and influential family connections. The ill success that has attended his quest thus far might be attributed by superstitious people to the fact that he is the thirteenth monarch of his name. The young king's father, the late Alfonso XII., died at the early age of twenty-eight and, though he longed for a son, did not live to see his boy. The present king was born May 17, 1886, about six months after his father's death. The queen mother, Maria Christina of Austria, determined to call him Alfonso, after his father, despite the objection of superstitious Spaniards to the luckless No. 13. In fact, she defied the prejudice against that number by asking Leo XIII. to be his godfather. When King Alfonso recently visited England he met at a tea given in his honor by the Marquis Townsend a beautiful Chicago girl, a friend of Mrs. Potter Palmer. He was much struck by the attractions of this American girl and paid her such marked attentions as to cause comment. His royal mother heard of it and was disturbed lest something might interfere with her plans to marry him to a princess. However, the Chicago girl has since married an American railroad man, and the king is still in the matrimonial market.

DIZZINESS AND WEAK NERVES CURED.

Nothing Helped Until Dr. Kennedy's NEW Medicine, Cal-cura Solvent, Was Taken.

"I very much wish," writes Loretta J. Vail, of Hopewell Junction, N. Y., that I might be able in a few lines, without putting myself forward, to let the people understand how valuable Cal-cura Solvent, the new medicine discovered by Dr. David Kennedy, is in cases of indigestion and the like ailments, which are so common among us. I suffered from a severe variety of liver complaint, with dizziness, numbness, and an exceedingly weak and excitable state of the nerves. I employed the best treatment within my reach, yet nothing really helped until I began to use Cal-cura Solvent, and that did." All druggists, $1.00.

An Indian Sea Serpent Legend.

The red men of the west have many curious legends concerning the rivers lakes and mountains of that region, none more weird than that which is told concerning Rock lake, Washington. Since time out of memory the Indian tribes of that vicinity believed the lake to be inhabited by a sea monster which never grows old and whose chief diet is Indian flesh. According to the legend, no Indian ever entered its waters and returned therefrom alive, no matter whether the rash act was committed by approaching its margin for a drink, for a plunge and a swim or for a canoe ride upon its placid bosom. All of the Indians of the northwest know of the terrors of Rock lake, and each and every one would prefer death with a poisoned arrow rather than to touch its waters. The last Rock lake horror, according to the legend, was in 1858, when a whole band of noble red men were sent to the happy hunting grounds by the monster.

The Gates of Paradise.

When the plague which visited Florence in the year 1400 had subsided the people decided as a thank offering to add bronze gates to the baptistery of the Church of St. John the Baptist, and the guild of merchants invited the best artists of the day to compete. The design of Ghiberti was considered faultless, and he was intrusted with the work on Nov. 23, 1403. It was twenty-one years before the two folding doors were completed, and so exquisite was their design and workmanship that Michael Angelo a century later said of them, "They are worthy to be the gates of paradise." This applied also to another door wrought and designed by the same artist, which was put in place June 16, 1452, a most important creation of Florentine art and one which evidently influenced Michael Angelo himself.

How to Cure Corns and Bunions.

First, soak the corn or bunion in warm water to soften it; then pare it down as closely as possible without drawing blood and apply Chamberlain's Pain Blam twice daily, rubbing vigorously for five minutes at each application. A corn plaster should be worn a few days to protect it from the shoe. As a general liniment for sprains, bruises, lameness and rheumatism, Pain Balm is unequaled. For sale by H. C. Giesler.

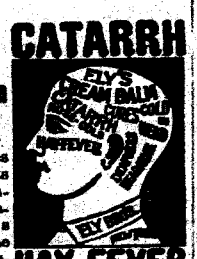
A Faithful Servant.

One night Prince Talleyrand was suddenly awakened by the firing of a pistol, and, seeing his valet walking about the room, he asked him what he was doing.

"There was a mouse in the room, your highness, and for fear it might disturb you I shot it."

Could Not Be Better.

The uniform success of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has won for it a wide reputation and many people throughout the country will agree with Mr. Charles W. Mattison, of Milford, Va., who says: "It works like magic, and is the best preparation I know of. It couldn't be any better." He had a serious attack of dysentery and was advised to try a bottle of this remedy, which he did, with the result that immediate relief was obtained. For sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.



The Dog and His Master.

Men and women are very much like clocks. Some are always on time, some are never on time, some are always in order, some are never in order. And, while you may be able to tell something of a family by its timepiece, you can tell more by the nature of the dog that greets you at the gate. A dog grows up after the fashion of its master or its mistress; a kind gentleman will not have an ugly brute on his place.—Exchange.

HAY FEVER

Pushing the Old Folks Aside.

When the babies are cross and a man would like a quiet retreat there is none for him. But in a few years, when the children are grown and he is in the way, the daughters and mother put their heads together and originate a den. There is no den for the mother because she gracefully eliminates herself by sitting in the kitchen or running over to a neighbor's. It is her natural disposition to hide in a corner or remove herself entirely, and it is not the natural disposition of the father; hence the den. It has a couch and some pipes and tobacco and the books which the neighbors haven't got around to borrowing as yet, though if father begins a story today the book will be found to be loaned out when he wants to finish it tomorrow. The den is a fashionable way of pushing the old man out. If there is one in your house, Mr. Man, don't be deceived.—Atchison Globe.

Some Seasonable Advice.

It may be a piece of superfluous advice to urge people at this season of the year to lay in a supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is almost sure to be needed before winter is over, and much more prompt and satisfactory results are obtained when taken as soon as a cold is contracted and before it has become settled in the system, which can only be done by keeping the remedy at hand. This remedy is so widely known and so altogether good that no one should hesitate about buying it in preference to any other. It is for sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Calamities That Didn't Occur.

When the first use was made of the natural gas wells people of a certain class were much disturbed. All sorts of evils were predicted, and warning letters were received by the companies in charge. One man sent a caution against boring much into the earth. The world was a hollow sphere, he said, filled with a gaseous substance and floating like a balloon in space. If the gas were allowed to escape disaster would follow. Another, claiming to be a scientific man, assured the owners of a well that any fire coming in contact with the escaping gas would be communicated to the gas beneath and cause terrific explosions. "Men are too inquisitive," he said. "They peer too far. Let them beware." The gas companies have kept on boring, and the world has so far held itself together.

A Judicious Inquiry.

A well known traveling man who visits the drug trade says he has often heard druggists inquire of customers who asked for a cough medicine, whether it was wanted for a child or for an adult, and if for a child they almost invariably recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The reason for this is that they know there is no danger from it and that it always cures. There is not the least danger in giving it, and for coughs, colds and croup it is unsurpassed. For Sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

The Theban Sphinx.

The Theban sphinx was said to be a monster sent by Juno to lay waste the country around Thebes. It had the head and bust of a woman, the body of a dog, the wings of a bird, the paws of a lion and a human voice. It at once became the terror of the neighborhood and devoured all who could not solve the riddle which it propounded, "What animal walks on four legs in the morning, two at noon and three at night?" Oedipus, attracted by the promise of King Creon of his crown and his sister in marriage, came to Thebes and declared that man goes on all fours in infancy, erect on two legs when upgrown and supports the infirmities of age with a staff. On hearing this correct solution the sphinx dashed her head against a wall, and the land had rest.

Only a little cold in the head may be the beginning of an obstinate case of Nasal Catarrh. Drive out the invader with Ely's Cream Balm applied straight to the inflamed stuffed up air-passages. Price 50 cents. If you prefer to use an atomizer, ask for Liquid Cream Balm. It has all the good qualities of the remedy in solid form and will rid you of catarrh or hay fever. No cocaine to breed a dreadful habit. No mercury to dry out the secretions. Price 75 cents, with spraying tube. All druggists, or mailed by Ely Bros., 56 Warren street, New York.

A Hat Story.

A Birmingham (Ala.) man told a somewhat remarkable hat story the other day, vouching for its truth by saying that he was the wearer of one of the hats. He walked into the dining room of an Atlanta hotel one day, putting his beside the one other on the hatrack. When he left the dining room he found that his hat had been taken and the other one left in its place. There was nothing to do but take it and be content. He came north, and at a hotel the hat swapping performance was again repeated. Some one took from the dining room hatrack the one taken by the story teller from the Atlanta hotel.

A few days later the Atlanta man recognized at the same hotel the hat he had lost. He took it. He went south a few days later and stayed at the hotel he had occupied on his former visit. One day when he entered the dining room there was only one hat on the rack. He placed his own beside it. When he left the dining room and picked up the one hat left he found it was the one he had lost there the year before.—New York Tribune.

Yes, it is Quite True

That nervous trouble, if neglected, leads straight to bodily and mental collapse. But a wise man does not neglect it. When dizziness, low spirits, indigestion, throbbing head and fluttering heart tell him that his nerves are going wrong, he takes Vernal Iron Nerve Food Tablets, and they are as certain to set him right as the sun is to rise to-morrow. In all forms of nervous weakness—sleeplessness, mental depression, urinary difficulty and the rest—these life-giving Tablets are a source of fresh and abounding vigor. Every function controlled by the nervous system, from digestion to thought, is performed as it ought to be. The welfare of the whole organism is promoted, and robust health takes the place of the wretched, half sick condition in which the patient may have been dragging along for years. The Tablets are sold by all druggists at 50 cents a box, or by mail. Sample mailed free. Address, Vernal Remedy Co., LeRoy, N. Y.

Hints About Screws.

Where screws are driven into soft wood and subjected to considerable strain they are very likely to work loose, and it is often difficult to make them hold. In such cases the use of glue is profitable. Make the glue thick. Immerse a stick about half the size of the screw and put it into the hole. Then put in the screw and drive it home as quickly as possible. When there is an article of furniture to be hastily repaired and no glue is at hand, bore a hole, insert the stick, fill the rest of the cavity with pulverized rosin, then heat the screw sufficiently to melt the rosin as it is driven in. Where screws are driven into wood for temporary purposes they can be more easily removed by dipping them in oil before inserting. When buying screws, notice that the heads are small and well cut, that there are no flaws in the body or thread part and that they have gimlet points. A screw of good make will drive as easily into oak as others into pine and will endure having twice the force brought against it.

Consumption

¶ There is no specific for consumption. Fresh air, exercise, nourishing food and Scott's Emulsion will come pretty near curing it, if there is anything to build on. Millions of people throughout the world are living and in good health on one lung.

¶ From time immemorial the doctors prescribed cod liver oil for consumption. Of course the patient could not take it in its old form, hence it did very little good. They can take and tolerate it for a long time. There is no oil, not excepting butter, so easily digested and absorbed by the system as cod liver oil in the form of Scott's Emulsion, and that is the reason it is so helpful in consumption where its use must be continuous.

¶ We will send you a sample free.

¶ Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

The Visit of Prince Louis Of Battenberg

THE visit of Prince Louis Alexander of Battenberg to American waters with his swift and powerful warships is proving a memorable event in naval annals on this side of the Atlantic. The prince and the officers in his command have already been received in Canada with many honors and much enthusiasm, and preparations have been made to show them every courtesy during their stay at Annapolis, New York and Washington. When the programme of the cruise was first arranged a stop at Newport was included, but Prince Louis is a great admirer of President Roosevelt and wished to have the itinerary provide for a visit to Washington so that he could meet the president there on the latter's return from Oyster Bay, and in consequence the stay of the squadron in Canadian waters was prolonged and the Newport visit cut out, much to the disappointment of the fashionable summer colony. King Edward gave Prince Louis an autograph letter of introduction to President Roosevelt, which he will present in person on the occasion of his visit to the national capital during the first week in November.

Although he is a prince, is closely related to three or four of the most powerful monarchs of Europe and is entitled to be addressed as "your serene highness," Louis is prouder of being a naval officer than of his royal connections and prefers the title of admiral to that of prince. His fleet, the second cruiser squadron of the British navy, comprises some of the finest vessels afloat. It has especial interest to American naval officers just now because our own government is building some half dozen ships of a similar type and seeking to increase the strength of our navy in the matter of speedy armored cruisers, approximating battleships in their armament. The flagship of Prince Louis is the Drake, which was launched in 1901 and shortly afterward made twenty-four knots an hour, beating the British record for vessels of this type. She is of 14,000 tons, 500 feet long and carries two 9.2 inch and twelve 6 inch guns, besides smaller weapons. Her engines have 30,000 horsepower. She is one of the costliest vessels in the British navy and combines the qualities of a battleship and a cruiser. Her consorts are the Bedford, Cornwall, Cumberland, Essex and Berwick, all cruisers of high speed. The stay of the admiral-prince and his fleet at Annapolis will be an occasion for much gayety, and a ball will be given on the Drake, which has been provided with a dancing deck capable of accommodating 600 couples. During the visit of Prince Louis and his staff in Washington the president will give a state banquet in their honor, and the British ambassador will dine and wine them at the British embassy. The scene of festivity will then be transferred to New York, where the squadron will spend about ten days prior to setting sail for Gibraltar. The fleet will be escorted from Annapolis to New York by some of the finest ships of the American navy under Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans, commander of the north Atlantic fleet. The escort will include his flagship, the Maine, and the Missouri, Kentucky, Kearsarge, Alabama, Iowa and Massachusetts, comprising the first squadron of the north Atlantic fleet, and the cruiser division under Rear Admiral Willard H. Brownson, made up of the Colorado, West Virginia, Pennsylvania and possibly the Maryland if her repairs can be completed in time. The combined British and American fleets will make one of the finest naval displays seen in New York harbor in many a day.

Prince Louis was born fifty-one years ago in Gratz, Austria, and is a son of Prince Alexander of Hesse and Fraulein Hauke, a maid of honor at St. Petersburg, with whom the prince eloped and who was afterward elevated to the status of princess. Prince Louis got into the English royal family by marrying King Edward's niece, the Princess Alice. He entered the British navy at fourteen, becoming naturalized as a British subject at the time, and his career has been an active one. He fought in the bombardment of Alexandria in 1882, has been in charge of the naval intelligence bureau and became rear admiral in 1902.

The prince has invented apparatus in use in the British navy and has a high reputation as a strategist.

The Drummer's Furlough.

Countless drummer boys have swelled the rolls of heroic deeds, and the heart of many a stern officer has been moved to pity for the childish drummers in his regiment. In the critical days of the civil war an order was issued that under no circumstances should a furlough be granted. Just then "General Scott," a Ohio drummer boy, aged thirteen, became terribly homesick and hungry for a sight of his mother.

Poor little General Scott! He had been in many battles, always obedient and fearless. But he was beaten at last. His lip quivered and his eyes filled with tears.

The bandmaster wrote out a brief statement of the case, but carefully avoided asking for a furlough, and sent General Scott with it up the line of officers. Generals Comly, Hayes and Crook each added a line, and then it was laid before Sheridan.

"No furlough can be granted," wrote the hero of Winchester, "but General Scott is hereby ordered to repair to his mother and to report again at headquarters in thirty days." Thus it was that one drummer boy went home on duty.—Youth's Companion.

The Work of the Heart.

One of the most remarkable things about the heart is the amount of work it does. Considering the organ as a pump whose task is to deliver a known quantity of blood against a known "head," it is easy to show that in twenty-four hours a man's heart does about 124 foot tons of work. "In other words," says a contemporary, "if the whole force expended by the heart in twenty-four hours were gathered into one huge stroke, such a power would lift 124 tons one foot from the ground. A similar calculation has been made respecting the amount of work expended by the muscles involved in breathing. In twenty-four hours these muscles do about twenty-one foot tons of work."

Less Than Cost.

"But," protested the broker who had advertised for a confidential clerk, "you want too much salary." "I've had a great deal of experience in the brokerage business," urged the applicant. "But you ask too much for it." "My dear sir, I assure you I'm offering it to you for much less than it cost me."—Philadelphia Ledger.

THE BIG STOCK IS GOING FAST

Ever since our announcement of the big stock that we purchased of the Hawkins-Illingsworth Co. of North Adams, Mass., appraised at $20,200.00 and that we were selling this enormous stock of Men's, Boy's and Children's Suits and Overcoats, Hats and Caps, Furnishings, Shoes, etc., at 50 cents on the dollar. this store has been crowded with people from all of the surrounding towns, taking advantage of the big sale and the big cut in prices, for never will there be again a chance to buy good, honest, reliable merchandise at such a cut in price. Is it any wonder, when people can buy anything in the line of merchandise from a suit or overcoat, shoes, hats or anything from the smallest article, for one-half for what you have to pay elsewhere and get the same class of merchandise. The K. B. Brokerage Co. is a company of capitalists, incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, whose special business is buying entire store stocks of merchandise of all kinds and descriptions, manufacturers that get overloaded with merchandise and hundreds of other instances of that kind, for spot cash, at less than the actual cost of raw material to manufacture, as they have done in this instance. All goods have been remarked, as we sell them on the same system as we buy them. We hereby guarantee to sell precisely as we advertise or pay you for your time and trouble in calling. It may be hard to believe that such an immense stock is to be slaughtered at such ridiculously low prices, but never the less it is the gospel truth, and we merely ask you to come and test our statement.

WILLIAM E. LEWIS, Clerk of Oswego County.

Adele Ritchie.

The Singer and Comedienne a Daring and Accomplished Horsewoman.

By BLANCHE NEWELL.

It was in her dressing room that Adele Ritchie first told me enthusiastically about her country place that she calls "The Farm" at Harrison, N. Y., her horses and her love for riding and driving and invited me to go out there some day and see for myself.

Two weeks later I got off a train at the little station at Harrison to meet Miss Ritchie, who was seated, smiling, in a dandy basket phaeton waiting to drive me to her place. The horses pranced and cut up capers that to me, in my ignorance of horseflesh and the ways of spirited animals, were absolutely terrifying. Miss Ritchie assured me that the horses were merely playful and we would have no trouble with them. I tried to believe her, but found myself busy with mental speculation on the extent of the probable injuries I felt sure I'd receive when the seemingly certain crash or upset came.

The way Miss Ritchie, who doesn't seem bigger than a Dresden china doll, handled those horses! Well, she must have wonderfully strong wrists and arms, for they were husky animals and seemed quite set upon going somewhere in an awful hurry, but the little actress calmed them down with apparent ease and simply made them do just as she wanted them to.

The drive was a delightful one over fine roads and undulating country, and I enjoyed it thoroughly after my fright passed. We drove up winding paths to a great porte-cochere, and Adele excused herself to change to a riding habit and left me to roam at will through the grand old colonial mansion and around the grounds.

Before I had half finished my inspection Miss Ritchie came down in a simple but very effective riding habit of dark oxford gray and led the way to a handsome building about 200 yards from the house. I thought it was a dwelling, but she smilingly told me it was merely her new coach house and stable. As soon as we entered the coach house she called in rapid succession the names of her horses, and the responses if a trifle hoarse were at least very cordial. Such a neighing and pawing and stamping I think I never did hear. They all seemed to know and love her. She stepped into stall after stall—there were eight horses there—and fed her pets either sugar or bread crusts, according to their various preferences. I was afraid that one of them would step on her or nip her or crowd her against the side of a stall, but they all acted as if they were trying hard to avoid doing just that. I remarked upon it.

"Why, my dear," the fair Adele replied, "they would rather go without their hay and bran for a week than hurt me even the tiniest little bit. I love them all, and they know it, and I think they like me pretty well."

Then she showed me the big coach and pointed out the four big horses that pull it; also a drag and three horses that pull that. I asked her who drove those affairs.

"Why, I do, silly," she replied, with a merry laugh. "I drive anything in the way of horses. I drive single, tandem, unicorn and four-in-hand and ride sidesaddle or cross saddle and follow the hounds. Do you ride? If you do, I'll give you a mount on a champion topper, and we will go over the course together, and a box of gloves to the one who finishes first. You know, I have a full course on these forty-five acres of mine here, with water jumps, stone walls, brush hurdles and a few five bar rail fences, so you can enjoy all the excitement you want."

They brought out the hunting [illegible] to ride, and in some way that I am still wondering about she managed to get on its back between its frantic jumps, and away they went. I thought at every jump that the actress would be thrown; but, when the horse landed, instead of falling off she stayed right on and urged him to what seemed even more foolhardy stunts.

She said she wanted me to drive with her in the four-in-hand and wanted to go and change her riding habit, but I insisted that she looked so charming in that it would be a shame to go to all the trouble of a change just for little me.

Well, we drove—that is, she did—in the four-in-hand and in several other kinds of rigs and with a variety of horses, and if Miss Ritchie ever wants a recommendation as a whip I stand ready to give it unconditionally.

A PAPER READING PEOPLE.

The per capita consumption of paper in the United States is the highest in the world, and of this amount the bulk is for daily newspapers. More than 650,000 tons of newspapers were printed in 1904, the total value of the paper being about $23,000,000. In 1890 less than 197,000 tons, at a cost of about $13,000,000, supplied the demand. In 1890 we were the greatest newspaper reading people on earth, and today we read three or four times as much. The greater part of advertising is done on paper, and the greater part of the paper consumed is by newspapers. The conclusion is obvious—the advertiser has found the newspaper the most profitable field for investment. It is reckoned that by judicious advertising throughout the nation a manufacturer or dealer may reach 99 per cent of the buyers at a comparatively small cost. —Butte Inter-Mountain.

The Story of a Tramp.

"I am Nicholas Giulot, professor of chemistry," said a tramp gathered with other vagabonds in the streets of Paris when asked by the police lieutenant to identify himself. And from his filthy clothes he fished documents proving that he spoke the truth. Investigation showed that the tramp was a former lecturer at the University of Paris, that for years he had astonished the scientific world by his discoveries and that finally the government sent him to the Kongo to study certain topographical and other conditions. When he came back from Africa the former society man seemed to have lost all his energy and gradually vanished from sight. "Send me to prison for a week at least," he begged the police. "I must have regular food and a bed, lest I perish."

Fires on Shipboard.

Carbonic acid has been suggested by an Italian inventor as a means for lessening the danger of fires on shipboard. The gas could be stored in the hold, either in the solid form or in steel cylinders in liquid condition. It is argued that in either form it would be innocuous to cargo, and as its density is very high it would permeate all the interstices between bales and cases and sink to the bottom of the hold. Wherever it reaches nothing can burn, so that perfect immunity from fire would be obtained up to the level of the gas. The gas itself is a waste product of breweries, and the only cost is the expense of the condensing plant. Before discharging the cargo ventilation would be necessary.

A Trunkless Body.

M. Sato, one of Japan's representatives at the peace conference, was chatting with some newspaper men, one of whom suggested that a plain statement was enough for a treaty of peace and that elaborate wording was not necessary. The Jap dissented from this view and by way of illustration told of an African traveler who was relating a harrowing adventure. "I peered into the jungle," said the traveler, "and saw a trunkless body." One of his auditors said sarcastically, "Who ever heard of a trunkless body?" The traveler answered calmly, "This was the body of an elephant."

Official Dress in Burma.

Burma is stirred by the question of official dress. The Rangun Gazette says that the younger generation of native officials, many of them educated in England, are wondering whether native or European costume is the better for their career. "If a young Burmese official adopts the European costume he is practically absolved from the obligation of showing respect to his superiors in the national fashion. You can hardly expect a young man in correct western attire to take off his shoes, kneel down on the floor or keep the open palms of his hands clasped on his stomach."

The Mikado in Public.

When the mikado is seen in public he manifests no interest in his subjects, neither smiling nor bowing as he passes along. He sits seemingly passionless, the accentuated type of the Japanese. Indeed he hardly seems to hear the applause of the crowds. This manner is to some extent perhaps a matter of etiquette, for the mikado must show that he remembers the divinity of his ancestors, who were gods 3,000 years ago.

A Lesson to Remember.

The protest against vaccination in the schools at Kansas City recalls an actual occurrence at Topeka a few years ago. It had been required by law that all school children in a certain district be vaccinated. One day a small boy brought a note to his teacher from his mother, which read:

Miss Smith—I did not have Jack vaccinated. I will tell you the reason. When I was a child I was vaccinated, and it proved fatal.

—Kansas City Journal.

His Work.

"I don't see how Henpeck can put up with his wife."

"Oh, she doesn't help him."

"Help him? How do you mean?"

"Why, during the preserving season. She makes him do the 'putting up' by himself."—Philadelphia Press.

Pique.

Soubrette—If I told you that a millionaire once said I was the apple of his eye, what would you say?

Comedian—I should say that he was a poor judge of fruit.—Detroit Tribune.

To the Point.

"How could you tell it was classical music?"

"Because I didn't like it."—Judge.

Art Treasures In Churches.

According to a report just [illegible] the French minister of [illegible] churches of France, and [illegible] Louvre, the Luxembourg, the [illegible] de Cluny and Carnavalet, contain art treasures of the nation.

It is estimated that if brought [illegible] the hammer the pictures, tapestries, statues, carvings and other works of art in the churches would reach the fabulous sum of six milliards of francs ($1,200,000,000).

The little Roman church of Conques, lost in the mountains of Aveyron, possessed of a treasure which was on view at the exhibition of 1900. It is of such marvelous beauty that a syndicate of art dealers offered for it the sum of 52,000,000 francs ($9,660,000). It contains the finest enamels in the world, reliquaries given by the early kings of France and Roman statues in gold and silver. Fortunately for France, the art syndicate did not buy it.—Jewelers' Weekly.

Why Mike Kelly Laughed.

Baseball cranks will all remember with pleasure the late Mike Kelly, the star attraction of the famous Bostons, then the champions of the National league. The Bostons were playing in a western city and had just returned to their hotel after the game, and the members of the team were separating and going to their rooms, while Kelly headed for the bathroom to take his regular "rub down."

A few minutes later one of the other players on the team was passing down the corridor heard Kelly's well known laugh inside the bathroom and stopped at the door and asked Kelly what the joke was.

Kelly replied, "This is the first time I ever got out of the bath without stepping on the soap."—Boston Herald.

According to Dorothy.

Dorothy is a sweet little maid of two and a half. Her father never carries a cane, and when a caller was seen with one one day she was observed standing before it wrapt in contemplation.

"Well, Dorothy," said her mother, "what's that?"

Dorothy looked up with a puzzled expression. "Umbwella wiv clothes on," she said.—[illegible] Magazine.

The Fulton Times.

Established 1868. FULTON, OSWEGO COUNTY, N. Y., WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1905. Vol. 38. No. 26.

JOHN M. FOSTER ELECTED MAYOR.

The electors of Fulton have registered their choice for the judiciary, county and city nominees, and a canvass of the situation and ballots reveals many interesting facts. Fulton is nominally Republican by a majority of over 900, but John M. Foster (Democrat) was elected over Edward Quirk (Republican) by a majority of 19. This would indicate that over 500 Republicans voted for Foster and about 200 Democrats voted for Quirk.

The Third ward gave Mr. Foster a majority of 9, while the Fourth ward, strongly Republican, gave Quirk a majority of 20.

The majority for Assemblyman Lewis in his own ward (the Fourth) was 124, and it should be remembered that this is an off-year, politically. Mr. Lewis's majority last year in the ward, when the Presidential electors were selected, was 103, which was considered phenomenal. This year Mr. Lewis's majority throughout the city is 663, which is a marvellous record.

District Attorney Baker's plurality in the city was 254.

Republican Aldermen elected:

Second Ward—William Osborne.

Third Ward—Charles R. Bennett.

Fourth Ward—Frank B. Dilts.

Fifth Ward—H. A. MacFarland.

Republican Supervisors elected:

Second and Third Wards—George R. Simons.

Fourth and Fifth Wards—George E. Simons.

The constitutional amendments and propositions submitted to the electors have been carried by large majorities.

THE RESULT ELSEWHERE.

Volney—The no-license propositions were carried. Kellogg (Republican) elected.

Granby—Supervisor Beardsley re-elected.

Palermo—Mr. Howard (Republican) elected Supervisor.

Schroeppel—Mr. Gregg (Republican) was elected Supervisor, and Mr. Richards was elected School Commissioner.

New York, Nov. 8.—After a campaign unusual in its public interest and excitement, Tammany Hall met defeat in its hard fought efforts to elect James W. Osborne to the district attorneyship of New York county, and saved the mayoralty of the city by probably only a few thousand votes.

George B. McClellan, Democrat, is re-elected mayor of New York by between 3,000 and 4,000 plurality over W. R. Hearst, Municipal Ownership, and William T. Jerome, Ind., is re-elected district attorney by about 8,000 over James W. Osborne. Dem.

In New York county the Municipal Ownership league indorsed a number of the Republican candidates for the state assembly and later returns indicated that the Democrats had lost 12 assemblymen from this county.

Mt. Vernon, N.Y., Nov. 8.—After one of the most exciting campaigns ever held in this city Dr. Edward Brush, the Independent candidate for mayor and the present incumbent, was re-elected over his Democrat and Republican opponents, William Grant and William Archer. Brush's plurality over Archer was 110, the Democratic aldermen, two Democratic supervisors were elected.

Strain Caused Candidate's Death.

Quincy, Mass., Nov. 8.—The Socialists of this city cast their vote for William Packard, the party candidate for the senate in the First Norfolk district, and late in the afternoon it was learned he was dead. Mr. Packard waged a vigorous campaign here and it is probable that the strain aggravated an affection of the heart. Death occurred yesterday.

President Voted and Was Gone.

Washington, Nov. 8. — President Roosevelt reached Washington from Oyster Bay at 4.40 o'clock yesterday afternoon, having been on the road sice 12.30 Monday night with the exception of the 20 minutes he spent at Oyster Bay casting his vote and chatting with neighbors. There were no incidents to mar the journey.

No Opposition to Mayor Hyde.

Plattsburg, Nov. 8. — H. Wallace Knapp, Rep., was re-elected member of assembly from Clinton county by an almost unanimous vote, the Democrats making no nomination for that office on their ticket. Boston, Nov. 8.—Governor Curtis Guild, Jr., of Boston, the Republican candidate, was elected governo. of Massachusetts in the state election by Charles W. Bartlett of Boston, the Democratic candidate.

For the second place on the ticket, for which there was an unusually warm contest, Eben S. Draper of Hopedale, the Republican candidate, won over Henry M. Whitney of Brookline, his Democratic opponent and the leading advocate for reciprocity, by a plurality of 2,792.

The Republicans also elected the usual large majority in both branches of the legislature.

Entire Republican City Ticket Elected.

Binghamton, Nov. 8.—Hiram H. Woodburn, Rep., was elected mayor of this city by a majority of about 900 and the entire city Republican ticket was elected. The Democrats, however, elected 8 out of the 13 aldermen, against nine Republicans to four Democrats in the present council.

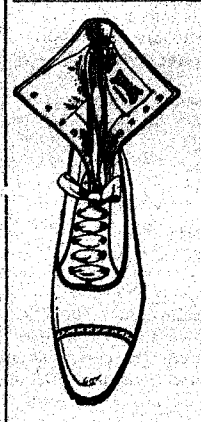
Board of Public Works.

A special meeting of the Board was held on Tuesday evening at which the clerk was directed to draw orders upon the West side sewer fund in the sum of $841.66.

Consent was given by the Board to the sub-letting by Contractor Frank Pidgeon to Thomas F. Moore of Syracuse, of the work upon that uncompleted section of the West side sewer from a point 875 feet south of the manhole at the corner of Beach street and Broadwell avenue and extending southerly in Broadwell avenue to Chestnut street, and thence easterly to the corner of Fifth street. The city is to pay Mr. Moore direct for the work and material subject to the approval of the Fidelity & Deposit company of Maryland.

At the regular monthly meeting of he Board, held on Monday evening, it was decided to continue the sewer 500 feet on Highland street, from South Seventh street.



The complaint from Mr. W. Boyce, that a broken tile drain on his premises causes the flooding of his property, was ordered investigated. The new drinking fountain on Broadway and First street was reported completed. A pump governor for the pumping station and cast-iron pipe for the west side sewer was ordered purchased.

Bills from the several departments were ordered paid. A new flagstone crosswalk on Broadway above Seventh street, were ordered constructed and several street improvements were ordered.

Governor Mickey and His Reform Ideas. Governor Pennypacker and His Retort—The Leader of the Chinese Boycott

ONE of the most aggressively moral of the western reform governors now attracting attention is John H. Mickey of Nebraska, who will appoint no men to office who drink or swear. In a recent interview Governor Mickey said: "As governor I am doing what I can to run the affairs of the state the same as if they were my own private business. I have never knowingly employed a man, either on my farm or in my bank, whom I knew to drink or swear. I made it a rule to engage only those of good moral habits, and I don't consider that any person can claim to possess good morals if he drinks or swears."

The governor is a Methodist and believes in being consistent in all things.

GOVERNOR MICKEY

When he was elected executive of the state for the first time he called off the plans for an inaugural ball. At his second inauguration nothing of the kind was attempted. Though strict in his religious ideas, the Nebraska governor has a keen sense of humor. At the luncheon that followed the launching of the Nebraska at Seattle Miss Mary Mickey told a naive story of her father. "One evening," she said, "my father dictated some of his correspondence to me. There was one letter that struck me. It was to an employee of my father's. It inclosed a railway ticket, and it said:

"'You ask me for a ticket for your mother-in-law, who is about to visit you. The ticket is within. You will notice that I did not forget to send an excursion ticket and that the return coupon is limited to three days.'"

The governor is very democratic in his ways and enjoys going out in the hayfield in the summer time and working with his men.

Governor Samuel W. Pennypacker of Pennsylvania is an enthusiastic collector of books and Americana. Not long ago it was advertised that the governor would sell his literary and historical collections. It happened that the chief justice and attorney general of the state were to do the same, and to some who commented upon the fact the governor said:

"It is an evidence of the honesty of the state officials. They are obliged to sell their books and pictures in order to live, their salaries not being sufficient." A valuation of $100,000 was placed upon the collection of Governor Pennypacker.

GOVERNOR PENNYPACKER.

Shortly after his campaign for election to the chief magistracy of the Keystone State Governor Pennypacker had a call from the editor of a newspaper which had been rather bitter in its opposition to him. The smoke of battle had cleared away, and the editor wanted to offer his congratulations on Mr. Pennypacker's election and incidentally to seek some information relative to the early history of Pennsylvania. In the course of conversation the judge produced what appeared to be a small bulletin from the files and passed it to his guest with the remark, "There, sir, is one of the first copies of the Pennsylvania Gazette, well preserved in spite of its age."

"How do you think the newspapers of today compare with it, judge?"

"Well, they are larger," said the new governor of the commonwealth.

The Chinese boycott of American goods continues, and people in this country are coming to realize that it has a broad significance. The boycott has had the effect of creating a sentiment in this country against a harsh enforcement of the exclusion laws and humiliating treatment of Chinese merchants and professional men or students seeking admission to our ports. The leader of the boycott movement in China is Tsing Sin Hing. The center of his operations is Hongkong, where, it is reported, the boycott has been very effective. Secretary Taft, who has just returned from the orient and had opportunity to observe the state of public sentiment in China in regard to America, says there is a decided resentment among the educated Chinese at the exclusion of their own class, but he does not think that they object especially to the exclusion of the cooly class. The secretary thinks the wisest course for the American government to adopt is to amend existing treaties so as to ameliorate the conditions under which those classes of Chinese entitled to enter the United States may be admitted in the future. A Presbyterian missionary in Canton attributes the spread of the boycott in great part to the power of the new native press. A few years ago there was no such thing as a Chinese press. Now in all the large cities it is a common sight to see the natives reading their own dailies, and these papers have been foremost in promoting the boycott movement and carrying it into the interior.

TSANG SIN HING.

Some curious ideas exist in regard to American goods, and many natives believe that the people of the United States have conspired to kill them by wholesale through poison concealed in articles exported from this country.

The case of James Ballington Howard of Kentucky will probably come up for a hearing in the supreme court of the United States next month. Howard was convicted of complicity in the murder of the late Governor Goebel, and both his case and that of Caleb Powers, who was also convicted of complicity in the murder, have excited wide interest. For some time after Goebel's death Howard was unmolested by the authorities. His home is in the mountains, all the passes and hiding places of which are familiar to him and his friends. When he was at last arrested he did not resist, but after the officers had started off with him on the way to Frankfort his sympathizers attempted to deliver him from his captors. They held up the train on which he was being taken away and ordered the engineer to back it to the station, but by a trick the engineer and conductor outwitted Howard's friends and transported the prisoner to the state capital. The first trial resulted in conviction, and he was sentenced to be hanged. A new trial was secured, and again he was convicted, but this time was sentenced to life imprisonment. His family never lost faith in him, and when his home and all his property had gone into the fund to pay for his fight for liberty friends came to his support so that the fight might be continued up to the court of last resort. Howard is thirty-eight years old, was county assessor when arrested and has a wife and three children. Mrs. Howard was Miss Mary Reed, daughter of a prominent physician of Clay county.

JAMES HOWARD.

The life insurance inquiry, which has now attracted national attention, started about six months ago in a controversy which arose in the Equitable society and led to a reorganization of that institution. One of the leaders in the movement for reform in the Equitable was Joseph Bowes, a general agent of the company at Baltimore.

JOSEPH BOWES.

In the famous controversy between James H. Hyde, vice president, on the one side, and James W. Alexander, president, and Gage E. Tarbell, second vice president, on the other, he took the side of Messrs. Alexander and Tarbell. One of the events that started the reform movement on a broad trend was the meeting of Equitable general agents and managers in New York last April. A committee of seventy-two was chosen by this convention to appear before Governor Frank W. Higgins at Albany and the superintendent of insurance, Francis Hendricks, at Syracuse and urge them to use their influence toward changes in the laws so as to give policy holders a larger voice in the affairs of insurance companies. Another thing the agents did was to ask Vice President Hyde for his resignation. Mr. Bowes headed the delegation which visited Governor Higgins and Superintendent Hendricks and also that which paid Mr. Hyde an unpleasant call. As chairman of the committee it fell to his lot to perform the disagreeable duty of asking Mr. Hyde to step down and out, something the latter refused at that time to do.

Samuel Spencer, president of the Southern railroad, who opposes the plan to give the interstate commerce commission control over railroad rates, declares that such a plan means commercial lynch law. In discussing the problems involved President Spencer said recently:

"Virtually there is not a single respect in which the interstate commerce commission resembles a court. It has extensive administrative duties to perform. It is required also to investigate, to hear and to institute complaints and to prosecute offenders against the act to regulate commerce. In other words, besides its numerous other functions it is a sort of railroad grand jury. In the courts of the country a grand jury cannot try a case which it has investigated and inaugurated, and no member of the grand jury can sit upon the jury which tries the case. To place all power in the hands of one tribunal which is or may be prosecutor, jury and judge and at the same time executioner is equivalent to providing by statute for the enforcement of commercial lynch law."

SAMUEL SPENCER.

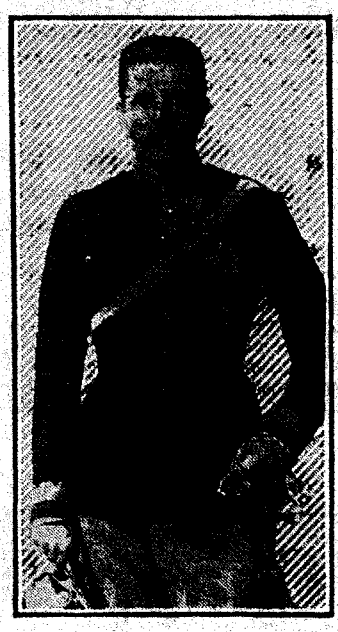
President Spencer was born in Columbus, Ga., in 1847 and is a graduate both of the University of Georgia and the University of Virginia. He was married in 1872 to Miss Louisa Vivian Benning. He rose rapidly in the railroad business, has been president of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, was a rapid transit commissioner in New York from 1891 to 1894, and at the present time, besides being president of the Southern, is an officer in a number of other railroad corporations.

Dark Ways of the Black Hand

Its Operations in the Large American Cities and the Movement to Exclude Members of the Society Seeking to Enter Our Ports

THE operations of the Black Hand society and other lawless associations of Italians and Sicilians have suggested an inquiry by immigration officials with a view to stricter methods in keeping out of the United States persons suspected of affiliation with such organizations. New York city, Jersey City, Paterson, N. J., and other places in the vicinity of New York have been the scene of many outrages in the past few months which have been attributed to the pernicious activity of members of these criminal societies. The police departments of cities where such crimes are committed have great difficulty in tracing the author, owing to the methods employed by the members of the bands to escape detection. Broughton Brandenburg, a magazine writer who has given especial study to immigration problems, has made the suggestion that the criminal authorities would be aided in their work were the United States immigration bureau to make a canvass of the entire territory east of Chicago with the view of deporting all suspects of the Black Hand stripe who are found to have criminal antecedents. Were such a task to be undertaken it would come under the immediate direction of the United States commissioner of immigration, Frank P. Sargent, who has already done much to make it more difficult for lawless characters to get into our ports.

In carrying on such an investigation Mr. Sargent would rely greatly upon the work of Detective Sergeant Joseph Petrosino of New York, who is reputed to know the members of these bands by sight and to have a close acquaintance with the criminal records of many who belong to the orders suspected of encouraging crime. It is said that there are at least 5,000 members of the Black Hand in the United States. It is a sort of Sicilian offshoot of the Mafia, and, though its operations are usually confined to persons living in the Italian quarters of the large American cities, an extension of its depredations is said to be imminent. A kindred band is that of the Camorra, which also has a large membership in this country. A short time ago a Sicilian family named Gimavalva, living in the Italian quarter of New York, received a letter demanding $1,000 for the Camorra. The family kept a small but prosperous grocery store. They paid no attention to the first letter, but on receiving a second reported the matter to the police. Their store was for some time guarded by officers in plain clothes, but in consequence of the demand for the services of Italian detectives, owing to frequency of Black Hand crimes, the guard was temporarily removed. Shortly afterward there was an explosion, the building in which the grocery was located was partially wrecked, and several persons were hurt. Last winter the police of Jersey City succeeded in locating the headquarters of a Black Hand band and placing ten of its members under arrest. In the lodge room where the band met was an assortment of strange equipment. The walls of the room were festooned by queer pictures and symbols, all of foreign creation or origin and many of them resembling religious emblems. In one spot above the head of a large table were the figures "2" and "3" in bright red. Detective Sergeant Petrosino says:



FRANK P. SARGENT.

"We have worked hard and faithfully to suppress this brigandage. We have gone without sleep and food and submitted ourselves to indignities. The bands are getting bolder and bolder. The trouble is that the Sicilians, their countrymen on whom they prey, will not aid the police. They are afraid of the brigands. It is peculiar of these Sicilians that they prey on one another. That makes it so difficult for us. The safety of the general public is that these fellows will not appoint places of meeting. They are aware that in this way the police catch them. But they are getting bolder, and they are very clever. In time they may find a way to prey on the general public. They are clever enough, I believe, to find that way. The Camorra are mostly Sicilians and Calabrians. Their society is governed by an executive committee, with headquarters in the various cities of the United States. The committeemen are called chiefs and are obeyed absolutely."

HEIR TO A THRONE.

Archduke Francis Ferdinand of Austria and His Romance.

In view of the present troubles in Hungary there is special interest in the person and character of the Archduke Francis Ferdinand, nephew of the Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria and heir to his throne. He is the son of the emperor's younger brother, the late Archduke Carl Ludwig, and became heir apparent to the throne of Austria and Hungary through the death of the only son of Francis Joseph, the late Crown Prince Rudolf. Francis Ferdinand was born at Gratz, Austria, in 1863 and as a youth devoted himself principally to sowing wild oats. Many stories are told of this period of his career. One of them narrates how, riding through a rural district one day, he met a procession of peasants who were carrying one of their number to his burial. Commanding the coffin to be laid down, he spurred his horse and leaped over it as if it were a fence in the hunting field. For this outrageous act he was fined and reprimanded by his uncle, the emperor. In spite of the wild pranks credited to his youth the character of the prince improved with advancing years, especially after the suicide of Crown Prince Rudolf brought him near to the throne. His imperial uncle took him under his immediate tutelage, and he grew in favor. But it was not long before an event occurred which threatened his chances of succession to the throne. It had been planned to marry him to the Princess Elizabeth, daughter of the late Crown Prince Rudolf. But he had for some years been in love with a lady in waiting to the Crown Princess Stephanie, the Countess Sophie Chotek, a clever and gifted woman, though not a beauty. He made up his mind that, throne or no throne, he would have the woman of his choice, and she became his morganatic wife. The emperor was very angry at first, but has since relented and given her the title of Princess Hohenburg. Though the princess may never become empress of Austria, it is now pointed out that there is nothing in the way of her becoming queen of Hungary.

ATTORNEY HUGHES, who is digging into the mire of the New York insurance business, has not yet touched bottom.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT can evidently discriminate between a railway rate regulating bill and a large ornamental bluff. The Senate is reminded of that fact.

THE moral and spiritual enlightenment of the electors is a matter which is arousing the attention of political economists. Certainly a civic revival is needed in every community. Intemperate abuse and slander such as the Observer has been pouring forth for several weeks, especially on the Republicans of the city and county, has been an insult and a reflection on their intelligence. But Editor Bradt claims immunity and endeavors to shirk responsibility because the articles did not emanate in his "fertile" imagination, but were the product of other massive intellects, with headquarters in Oswego. He and his conferees should pray for more "sweetness and light." Reformation is necessary.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

President Calls on Nation to Observe Thursday, Nov. 30.

WASHINGTON, D. C., NOV. 8.—President Roosevelt has declared Thursday, Nov. 30, Thanksgiving Day. The proclamation is as follows:

When nearly three centuries ago the first settlers came to the country which has now become this great republic, they fronted not only hardship and privation, but terrible risk to their lives. In those grim years the custom grew of setting apart one day in each year for a special service of thanksgiving to the Almighty for preserving the people through the changing seasons.

The custom has now become national and hallowed by immemorial usage. We live in easier and more plentiful times than our forefathers, the men who with rugged strength faced the rugged days, and yet the dangers to national life are quite as great now as at any previous time in our history.

It is eminently fitting that once a year our people should set apart a day for praise and thanksgiving to the giver of good and at the same time that they express their thankfulness for the abundant mercies received, should manfully acknowledge their shortcomings and pledge themselves solemnly and in good faith to strive to overcome them.

During the past year we have been blessed with bountiful crops. Our business prosperity has been great. No other people has ever stood on as high a level of material well being as ours now stands. We are not threatened by foes from without. The foes from whom we should pray to be delivered are our own passions, appetites and follies, and against these there is always need that we should war.

Therefore I now set apart Thursday, the 30th of this November, as a day of thanksgiving for the past and of prayer for the future, and on that day I ask that throughout the land the people gather in their homes and places of worship and in rendering thanks unto the Most High for the manifold blessings of the past year consecrate themselves to a life of cleanliness, honor and wisdom, so that this nation may do its allotted work on the earth in a manner worthy of those who founded it and of those who preserved it."

Nature Needs But Little.

Nature needs only a Little Early Riser now and then to keep the bowels clean, the liver active, and the system free from bile, headaches, constipation, etc. The famous little pills "Early Risers" are pleasant in effect and perfect in action. They never gripe or sicken, but tone and strengthen the liver and kidneys. J. C. P. Jones, Chief Burgess, Millesburg Borough, Pa., says. "I never used pills in my family during the 40 years of housekeeping that gave such satisfactory results as DeWitt's Little Early Risers." No better pill was ever made. Sold by H. C. Giesler and G. T. Boyington.

Every Ounce You Eat.

Every ounce of food you eat that fails to digest does a pound of harm. It turns the entire meal into poison. This not only deprives the blood of the necessary tissue-building material, but it poisons it. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure is a perfect digestant. It digests the food regardless of the condition of the stomach. It allows that organ to rest and get strong again. Relieves Belching, Heart Burn, Sour Stomach, Indigestion, Palpitation of the Heart, etc. W. H. Cook, Tilton, N. H., says: "I have taken Kodol Dyspepsia Cure and find it the best remedy for all stomach troubles. It is worth its weight in gold." Sold by H. C. Giesler and G. T. Boyington.

We have just received a splendid line of Bibles, prayer-books, rosaries, etc., which we have temptingly priced.

An Ordeal of the Commune.

The stirring days of the French Commune are used by Basil King as the vehicle of a powerful story in the November McClure's. "The Last Love-feast" belongs with the big stories that are few and far between.

It focuses in one brief, terrible, dramatic moment the fiercest human passions, and lays bare the seared souls of two big leaders of men. One has betrayed a woman to save his cause, and the other has redeemed her by treason to his comrades. It raises an unanswerable question of the relativeness of guilt, and drives home the lesson that the end never justifies the means.

ADMIRAL SEYMOUR.

Distinguished British Naval Officer Now In This Country.

Admiral Sir Edward Hobart Seymour, who is now on a visit to the United States, is one of the most able and popular of England's fighting men. He is a hero of the Crimean war, received a medal of honor for his conduct as captain of the Iris in the Egyptian war of 1882, and in 1900 commanded the first expedition of the allies for the relief of the legations at Peking. As a lieutenant of twenty he leaped into a shark infested sea to save a sailor from drowning. In 1870 he was wounded while rescuing an English vessel from pirates in the Kongo river. In the China war of nearly fifty years ago he helped to blow up the Taku forts. His naval service has been a long one, for he entered the navy at twelve and is now sixty-five years of age. All these years have been unusually full of activity. He became a full admiral in 1901. He was commander in chief on the China station when the Boxer insurrection broke out and greatly distinguished himself by his conduct in leading the marines of the allied powers.

The Mascots of the Navy

The Pussy Cat of the Cruiser Chicago That Gives the Military Salute—Admiral Dewey's Dog Bob—The Oregon's Black Pig.

THAT a sailor is superstitious has become proverbial. The mariner believes in signs and omens and guides his course by them as much as by his chart and compass. In the navy there are all kinds of beliefs as to good and bad luck, and the sailors whose duty is to fight for Uncle Sam on the sea feel much more confident of victory when a battle is impending if all the portents of good luck are with them. Great reliance is placed on the help of mascots. A mascot, according to the dictionary, is anything that brings good luck or is supposed to do so. In the navy a vessel of war is generally supplied with some kind of an animal to serve the purpose of a mascot. Monkeys, parrots, goats, dogs, cats and even pigs have been drafted into the service of Uncle Sam in this capacity. One of the most accomplished mascots on an American ship of war at present is the cat which is believed to bring good luck to the cruiser Chicago and her gallant men. Pussy is very popular with officers and crew and has been taught many tricks. A snapshot was recently secured of this clever feline in the act of giving the military salute to an officer, just like any jacky.

One of the most famous mascots in the navy was Admiral Dewey's dog Bob. Bob was picked up by some of the Olympia's sailors in Manila bay. He was a chow dog, just a little ball of fur, with a tail bent up over his back. The chow dog is a near relative of the Eskimo dog, and poor people in China often eat him; hence his name. Bob followed the admiral wherever he went on board the flagship, and he and the hero of Manila bay became fast friends. Another famous mascot of the navy was Billy, the goat mascot of the Brooklyn, which achieved notoriety in the period succeeding the Spanish war when the vessels prominent in that contest were so often visited by civilians. Billy took a keen interest in visitors who were shown over the cruiser when the Brooklyn was in port. So long as they were looking at him he remained very polite, but just as soon as their backs were turned he yielded to the butting proclivities characteristic of the goat family since the time of Noah and the flood.

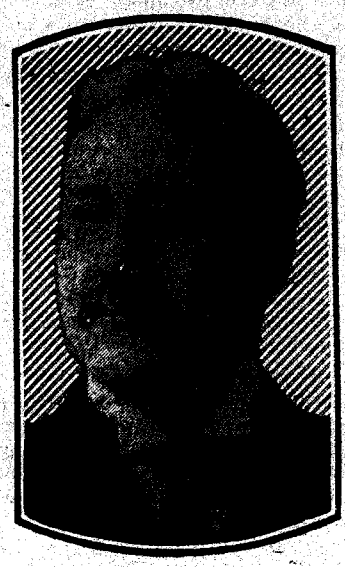
The battleship Oregon obtained a unique and very lucky mascot at the time of the battle of Santiago. The men of the Oregon succeeded in rescuing from one of the conquered Spanish ships, the Maria Theresa, a big black pig. They took him aboard and named him Blanco in honor of the Spanish officer who was captain general at Havana in the latter part of the regime of the dons. Blanco was a great favorite and proved a very well behaved mascot for a member of the pig family. Although brought up among Spaniards, he took readily to American ways, submitted readily to being washed when the decks of the Oregon were scrubbed and even became attached to the hose which was turned on him upon these occasions. He was one of the cleanest pigs that ever trod the deck of a warship. He evinced a good ear for music, for when the "mess gear" was sounded he would start for the mess deck with the men. To reward him for his good behavior the latter would occasionally take him on shore to eat grass. The Oregon's pig conformed to the popular idea that a mascot to bring real good luck should be homely. He was as homely as could be desired.

One of the yachts which represented England several years ago in the contest for the America's cup had a parrot for a mascot. The bird talked too much, for the yacht lost the race. At least that was one explanation given for the nonsuccess of the British boat. In the navy it is considered by the more superstitious of quite as much importance to have a good mascot as to keep the guns in order. The fighting men of our navy are brave under all circumstances, but they are like everybody else in being able to fight better when they firmly believe that luck is with them.

Unenthusiastic.



"Be studious, my son," said the habitual adviser, "and you may have a tablet in the hall of fame."

"Yes," answered the captious youth, "and be pointed out as an example of what ordinary people get in while real genius is excluded."—Washington Star.

A FINANCIER'S CAREER.

Frank A. Vanderlip and an Editor's Advice on Optimism.

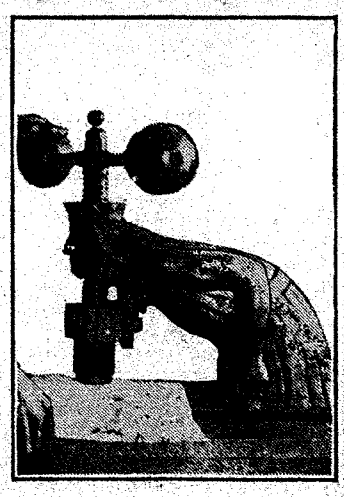
Frank A. Vanderlip, ex-assistant secretary of the treasury, advances a theory as to why the financial world has so well stood the strain of a war which has cost the combatant nations, Russia and Japan, $2,000,000,000. He thinks it is due to the large output of gold and believes that we may look forward in the near future to an annual average output of $400,000,000 of new gold for several years. Mr. Vanderlip was born in 1864 at Aurora, Ill.,

FRANK A. VANDERLIP.

and his early years were spent on a farm and in a machine shop. He got together enough money to pay for a year's course in the University of Illinois. On its completion he went back to the machine shop and while at work there practiced short hand. He was on the Chicago Tribune and afterward associate editor of the Chicago Economist. When Lyman J. Gage became secretary of the treasury he invited Mr. Vanderlip to be his private secretary and later promoted him to be assistant secretary. From this position Mr. Vanderlip retired in 1901 and has since been engaged in banking.

In 1893 the banker of today was with the Chicago Tribune, and the panic times had begun. Banks were failing every day. Joseph Medill, the editor of the Tribune, was in southern California. He was much exercised over the situation and was in close touch with the office, constantly advising conservatism and optimism in the newspaper reports.

Vanderlip by close economy and some minor investments had saved $800. It was all he had. One day the bank failed in which he had deposited his little nest egg. He went despondently to his desk. The world looked black to him. It was a hard blow.



A messenger boy came in with a telegram. Vanderlip signed for it mechanically. His thoughts were on his lost $800. He tore open the envelope. The telegram was from Mr. Medill. It read, "Take a cheerful view of the situation."

A HISTORIC DEVICE.

Great Seal of the United States and the Story of Its Adoption.

The affixing of the great seal of the United States to a treaty or other important document is a ceremony of interest. The great seal is carefully guarded, and its custodian is the secretary of state. On July 4, 1776, when the Declaration of Independence had been adopted, John Hancock, president of the Continental congress, said:

"We are now a nation, and I appoint Benjamin Franklin, John Adams and

AFFIXING THE GREAT SEAL TO A PASSPORT.

Thomas Jefferson a committee to prepare a device for a great seal of the United States of America." These statesmen conferred six weeks on the matter, and each submitted a design. Jefferson prepared a conjoint design embodying the best features of all three, and this was submitted to congress in an elaborate report, but it was not acted upon definitely, and the matter went along for several years. It was not until June 20, 1782, that a great seal was finally adopted by congress. The committee which prepared it was composed of Henry Middleton of South Carolina, Elias Boudinot of New Jersey and Edward Rutledge of South Carolina. The design was the work of Will Barton of Philadelphia, brother of the patriotic Dr. Benjamin Barton. The seal was first used on Sept. 16, 1782, on a commission granting authority to General Washington to arrange with the British for exchange of prisoners of war. It has been re-engraved several times.

The Invincible Armada.

The invincible armada was a famous naval expedition sent by Philip II. of Spain against England in 1588. It consisted of 130 vessels, 2,430 great guns 4,575 quintals of powder, nearly 20,000 soldiers, above 8,000 sailors and more than 2,000 volunteers. It arrived in the English channel on July 19 and was defeated the next day by Admiral Howard, who was seconded by Drake Hawkins and Frobisher. Eight fire ships having been sent into the Spanish fleet, they bore off in great disorder. Profiting by the panic, the English fell upon them and captured or destroyed a number of their ships, and Admiral Howard maintained a running fight from July 21 to July 27, with such effect that the Spanish commander, despairing of success, resolved to return home, and as escape through the English channel was prevented by contrary winds he undertook to sail around the Orkneys, but the vessels which still remained to him were dispersed by storms or shipwrecked among the rocks and shallows on different parts of the Scottish and Irish coast, and upward of 5,000 men were drowned, killed or taken prisoners. Of the whole armada fifty-three ships only returned to Spain and these in a wretched condition. The English lost but one ship.

The Maroons.

The Maroons were the descendants of African slaves, brought to Jamaica by the Spaniards. During the conquest of Jamaica by the English the Maroons, deserted by their masters, fled to the mountain fastnesses, where they lived a fierce, wild life. Increasing daily in number by the many deserting slaves, the Maroons soon became formidable to their white neighbors, whom they plundered and killed. In 1738 an agreement was made which secured to them an independence, which they maintained for 140 years, but the English finally determined to exterminate them and for this purpose pursued them barbarously with bloodhounds. Hemmed in on every side and hunted down, they were compelled to submit, and only 600 escaped, who were transported to the bleak shores of Nova Scotia, where they perished miserably.

The Sunday Stone.

The "Sunday stone" of the Oxford museum was taken from a colliery drain and is a perfect calendar of Sundays and holidays. It is composed of carbonate of lime. When miners were at work, the water running through the drain left a black deposit colored by coal dust. At other times the water ran clear, leaving the stone deposit white. In course of time these black and white layers formed a stone of considerable thickness, which constitutes a very complete calendar. Each day of work has as its record a black streak, followed by a white streak, which marks the hours of rest at night. Wider white streaks mark the Sundays and whole holidays, and thus it has taken its name as the "Sunday stone."—London Mail.

Rossini's Memory.

Rossini's memory was lacking in retentiveness, especially in respect to the names of persons who had been introduced to him. This forgetfulness was frequently a cause of amusement whenever Rossini was among company. One day he met Bishop, the English composer. Rossini knew the face well enough and at once greeted him. "Ah, my dear Mr."— but the name escaped his memory, and to convince him that he had not forgotten him Rossini began whistling Bishop's glee, "When the Wind Blows," a compliment which "the English Mozart," as Bishop had been dubbed, recognized quite as readily as if his ecclesiastical surname had been mentioned.

A Mob.

A mob is usually a creature of very mysterious existence, particularly in a large city. Where it comes from or whither it goes few men can tell. Assembling and dispersing with equal suddenness, it is as difficult to follow to its various sources as the sea itself, nor does the parallel stop here, for the ocean is not more fickle and uncertain, more terrible when aroused, more unreasonable or more cruel.—Dickens.

Choosing a Wife.

The plainest features become handsome unawares when associated only with kind feelings and the loveliest face disagreeable when linked with ill humor or caprice. People should remember this when they are selecting a face which they are to see every morning across the breakfast table for the remainder of their lives.—N. P. Willis.

Real Enjoyment.

"Yes, you can spend the day at grandpa's, but be a good boy or you papa will whip you."

"Yes'm."

"I don't see how you get so much enjoyment out of talking to grandpa."

"I get him to tell me about the lickings he used to give pop."—Houston Post.

Sympathetic Courtesy.

He who can put real human sympathy into the conventional phrases of courtesy is indeed a man of tact.

Le Rire represents a dentist's servant opening the door to a patient.

"And whom, sir," asks the servant, bowing low, "shall I have the misery of announcing?"

An Excuse.

Patience—What reason had she for marrying him? Patrice—Why, he had money. Patience—That is not a reason; that's an excuse.

Air is to the body what coal is to the furnace. The deeper the breathing the more drafts are turned on and the brighter life burns.

Paganini's Cab.

The characteristic good nature of Paganini, the celebrated Italian violinist, is well illustrated by the following anecdote: One day while in Vienna he hired a cab to take him from the hall where he had added one more to his long list of triumphs to his lodgings. When Paganini awoke the next morning he found the cabman waiting for an interview. He, in fact, burst into Paganini's private apartment.

"What do you want?"

"Excellency, I come to solicit a favor of you—a very great favor. I am father of four children and have the honor to be your fellow countryman. You are wealthy, your fame is unequaled, and if you please you can make my fortune."

"What do you mean?"

"Well, authorize me to write in large letters at the back of my vehicle these two words: 'Paganini's Cab!'"

The musician consented, says Olga Racster in an interesting volume entitled "Chats on Violins," and six months afterward the cabman was enjoying a comfortable income solely derived from Paganini's cab.

Masts and Rigging.

Each of the three masts of all but very small vessels consists of a number of sticks one above another. The "heel" of the topmast comes a little below the "head" of the lower mast and is secured by a "cap," a sort of iron band, and a bar, called a "fid." Above the topmast comes the topgallant mast and above that the royal mast.

The running rigging consists of ropes used in handling the yards and sails, and every rope has a distinguishing name. Halyards are ropes used to hoist yards and sails. Braces are ropes used to swing the yards around by.

To the beginner the names of ropes are apt to be very confusing. Old salts are fond of spinning a yarn about a lad who wanted to go to sea until he heard that the fore topgallant studding sail boom tricing lining thimble block mousing was the name of about the smallest bit of rope on board ship, when he at once concluded that, such being the case, he could never expect to master the name of the largest rope and consequently decided to become a farmer.

Gypsies and Tartars.

Some ethnologists claim that the gypsies are of the same family as the Tartars. They are said to have appeared first in Germany in 1417 under the name of Tartars or Zegins and by a statute of Henry VIII. were expelled from England in 1530. This not proving efficient to exterminate the race stronger measures were taken, described by Thomas Cromwell in a quaint letter still extant. "And in case ye shall here or knowe of any such Gipcyans," he writes to "My Lorde of Chester," "that ye shal compell them to depart to the next porte of the see, and eyther without delaye uppon the first winds that shall conveye them, or if they shal in any wise breke that cammaundment, to see them executed, without sparing uppon any commysion, license or placards that they may shewe or aledge for themselfes to the contrary."

A Fine Sense of Humor.

The Russian Emperor Ivan IV. once ordered one of his high court officials to procure for him a measure full of fleas, and when the poor man failed, through the friskiness of the insects in jumping out of the measure, had his head cut off and inflicted a fine of 7,000 rubles on the city of Moscow for its share in the failure. On other occasions he would wander away into the country with some boon companions and a few caged bears, and when he came to a peaceful village would let slip the bears and shriek with laughter as the villagers rushed for safety or fell victims to the hungry animals.

Wouldn't Work Nowadays.

The Egyptians had a very remarkable ordinance to prevent persons from borrowing imprudently. An Egyptian was not permitted to borrow without giving to his creditors in pledge the body of his father. It was deemed both an impiety and an infamy not to redeem so sacred a pledge. A person who died without discharging that duty was deprived of the customary honors paid to the dead.

To Die In the Last Ditch.

The phrase "to die in the last ditch" is stated by an English authority in such matters to be an Americanism, originating during the civil war. In fact, it was first used by William, prince of Orange, who during the war with France was asked what he would do in case the troops of Holland were defeated in the field and who replied, "I will die in the last ditch."

Decidedly Friendly.

Ranter—I thought this paper was friendly to me.

Editor—So it is. What's the matter now?

Ranter—I made a speech at the banquet last night, and you didn't print a line of it.

Editor—Well? What further proof did you want of our friendship?

A Rare Case.

Sorroughs—I'm always expecting disaster, but still the unexpected happened to me once. Cheerfule—How was that? Sorroughs—When the calamity came nobody remembered to say, "I told you so."—Houston Chronicle.

The Only Sure Way.

"Say, old man," said the soulful young man, "what's the best way to find out what a woman thinks of you?" "Marry her," replied Peckham promptly.—Catholic Standard and Times.

ROYAL MEDICAL CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

A TRINITY OF EVILS.

Cured by Dr. Kennedy's NEW Medicine After Other Treatment Had Failed.

Mr. Martin Montgomery, of Silvara, Penn., formerly of Roxbury, N.Y., writing to Dr. David Kennedy, of Kennedy Row, said:

"Your new medicine, Cal-cura Solvent, is immense. It cured me of liver and kidney troubles, and rheumatism, after a lot of weary dosing with things that did no good. It is a record breaker and no mistake."

As in Mr. Montgomery's case, rheumatism is often, indeed almost always, complicated with kidney and liver trouble. It is because Cal-cura Solvent acts on the kidneys and liver and at the same time expels uric acid from the blood, that it is such a reliable remedy for rheumatism and the attendant disorders. It cures by removing the cause, therefore the cure is permanent, safe and sure. All druggists, $1.00.

Diet and Digestion.

Abstemiousness in diet is very conducive to a good digestion. It is preferable to be a little underfed than at all overfed. Hence we come to one of the first causes of indigestion in the adult, too large a quantity of food. After an ordinary meal the food should all have left the stomach by the end of six or seven hours. If owing to an excessive quantity the stomach cannot deal with the amount some food remains in the stomach and ferments. This creates discomfort, pain, wind, nausea and perhaps vomiting, by means of which the abused stomach gets rid of its burden. If the sufferer is not thus fortunately sick the best thing he can do is to drink a large tumbler of lukewarm water, which will probably induce vomiting and so wash out the stomach. Half a teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda added to the fluid will cause still more relief. During the next twenty-four hours the lightest diet, such as a little tea and dried toast, some boiled rice, a little arrowroot or corn flour, should be taken.

Consideration.

Duke McGluke—Why do you call your dog Feathers? Count Noaccount—Because I dislike to call him down.

Don't express a positive opinion unless you perfectly understand what you are talking about.

How to Cure Corns and Bunions.

First, soak the corn or bunion in warm water to soften it; then pare it down as closely as possible without drawing blood and apply Chamberlain's Pain Blam twice daily, rubbing vigorously for five minutes at each application. A corn plaster should be worn a few days to protect it from the shoe. As a general liniment for sprains, bruises, lameness and rheumatism, Pain Balm is unequaled. For sale by H. C. Giesler.

The Drum.

The history of the drum goes back to the childhood of the world. The Greeks ascribe its invention to Bacchus. The Egyptians had it at least 1,600 years before Christ. Pizarro found drums in South American temples. The snakes of Ireland, we are told, fled from the island before the drumbeats of St. Patrick. Our Puritan ancestors used the drum as a church bell. When Sir Edmund Andros ordered the drums to "strike up" to drown the voice of protesting colonists, the lights in the Hartford council chamber went out and the charter of Connecticut disappeared in the darkness to the safer shade of the Charter oak. —Youth's Companion.

Could Not Be Better.

The uniform success of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has won for it a wide reputation and many people throughout the country will agree with Mr. Charles W. Mattison, of Milford, Va., who says: "It works like magic, and is the best preparation I know of. It couldn't be any better." He had a serious attack of dysentery and was advised to try a bottle of this remedy, which he did, with the result that immediate relief was obtained. For sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

A Two Edged Cure.

A story is told of the wonderful cure from deafness of a patient who was recommended to hear a Wagner opera and to sit near the orchestra by the trombones. The physician accompanied his patient and sat beside him. Suddenly, while the crash of the instruments was at its loudest, the deaf man found he could hear. "Doctor," he almost shrieked, "I can hear!" The doctor gave no sign that he noticed the remark. "I tell you, doctor," repeated the patient in ecstasy, "you have saved me! I have recovered my hearing." Still the physician was silent. He had become deaf himself.—Harper's Weekly.

A Wonderful Automaton.

In the year 1770 the most wonderful automaton that has ever been constructed was exhibited at Exeter exchange, London. This automatic wonder represented a country gentleman's house, and was of such intricate and elaborate construction that no one disputed the claim of the exhibitor when he declared that he had worked twenty-seven years in perfecting it. It showed the regulation English country house, with parks, gardens, cascades, temples, bridges, etc., besides over 100 appropriately clad human figures in the gardens, on the bridges, chopping wood and at various building operations. In the park were several deer moving naturally about and four horses and a coach following the meandering road. Besides the above the figures of boys were seen fishing from the bridges, while a boat load of ladies and gentlemen regularly rowed across an enlargement in the brook, much to the consternation of the natural looking figures of geese and ducks which were paddling about in the water. The whole of these animate and inanimate figures were inclosed in a space only four and one-half feet square.

Some Seasonable Advice.

It may be a piece of superfluous advice to urge people at this season of the year to lay in a supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is almost sure to be needed before winter is over, and much more prompt and satisfactory results are obtained when taken as soon as a cold is contracted and before it has become settled in the system, which can only be done by keeping the remedy at hand. This remedy is so widely known and so altogether good that no one should hesitate about buying it in preference to any other. It is for sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

A Winning Text.

When the Duke of Ormond, whose family name was Butler, was going to take possession as lord lieutenant of Ireland, he was driven by a storm on to the Isle of Man, where a Rev. Mr. Joseph, a poor curate, entertained him as hospitably as his means permitted. On his departure the duke promised to provide for him as soon as he became viceroy. The curate waited many months in vain and at last went over to Dublin to remind his grace of his promise. Despairing of gaining access to the duke, he obtained permission to preach at the cathedral. The lord lieutenant and his court were at the church, but none of them remembered their humble host till he pronounced his text, which, it must be acknowledged, was well chosen, "Yet did not the chief butler remember Joseph, but forgot him." The preacher was at once invited to the castle and a good living provided for him.

A Judicious Inquiry.

A well known traveling man who visits the drug trade says he has often heard druggists inquire of customers who asked for a cough medicine, whether it was wanted for a child or for an adult, and if for a child they almost invariably recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The reason for this is that they know there is no danger from it and that it always cures. There is not the least danger in giving it, and for coughs, colds and croup it is unsurpassed. For Sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Winding Your Watch.

The old superstitious belief that you will change your luck if you stop winding your watch at night and wind it in the morning may have some slight basis in fact, according to a jeweler, who says that the morning is the proper time to do the winding. This is not only because the hour of rising is for the average man much more regular than that for retiring, but even the soberest and most orderly of men are apt to relax and prone to carelessness at bedtime, when more or less worn by the wear and tear of the day. In this condition the winding is apt to be done in a jerky, irregular sort of way or too far or not far enough. "Nine people out of ten wind their watches on going to bed," said the jeweler, "but if they would do it when they get up, at some regular point in the process of making their toilet, they would do it much better."—Philadelphia Record.

Curious Almshouse.

The most curious almshouse in England is St. Mary's hospital at Chichester. There eight old ladies live actually in the church, which is a fine old building dating from 1680. It was originally a monastery, but when Queen Elizabeth came to visit there she turned it into an almshouse to endure as long as almshouses exist. The old ladies have two neat little rooms each down the sides of the main church, with windows looking out on the garden. They have each a coal supply, a kitchen range, water and gas. At one end of the church is the chapel, where daily services are held. The choir stalls are beautifully carved old oak, the original seats that the monks used. The church stands in a quiet little square.

King James' Books.

Some very fine binding was executed for King James I., who during his entire life was an enthusiastic patron of letters and art. In some of his books the thistle is introduced with heavy corner pieces, and the arms in the center. One fine piece of work, now in the British museum, is in bright brown calf, powdered with flower-de-luce. Another folio in crimson velvet has the arms of England embroidered on both sides with gold thread on a ground-work of yellow silk. The king's initials are worked above. The lettering is in leather, and the boards are tied together by red ribbon, constituting a regal book in every particular. John Gibson, in Scotland, and the Barkers, in England, were appointed to be the king's binders, but there is little trace of their work now extant.

Animal Having the Most Teeth.

The animal having the most teeth is the great armadillo of south Central and northern South America. It is a fact well known to most people that the normal or average number of teeth in mammals is thirty-two—sixteen above and the same number below. The great armadillo, however, is an exception, having from 92 to 100. He has from twenty-four to twenty-six in each side of the upper jaw and from twenty-two to twenty-four in each side of the lower jaw. Another peculiarity lies in the fact that they are all molars or grinders. They increase in size from front to back, instead of from the root, and are wholly destitute of enamel.

Many sufferers from nasal catarrh say they get splendid results by using an atomizer. For their benefit we prepare Ely's Liquid Cream Balm. Except that it is liquid it is in all respects like the healing, helpful, pain-allaying Cream Balm that the public has been familiar with for years. No cocaine nor other dangerous drug in it. The soothing spray relieves at once and cure is certain. All druggists, 75 cents, including spraying tube or mailed by Ely Bros., 56 Warren street, New York.

A Liberal Education.

Professor Huxley held this opinion as to what constitutes a liberal education:

The man has a liberal education who has been so trained in youth that his body is the ready servant of his will and does with ease and pleasure all the work that as a mechanism it is capable of; whose intellect is a clear, cold, logical engine, with all its parts of equal strength and in smooth working order, ready, like the steam engine, to be turned to any kind of work and spin the gossamers as well as forge the anchors of the mind; whose mind is stored with a knowledge of the great and fundamental truths of nature and of the laws of her operations; one who, no stunted ascetic, is full of life and fire, but whose passions are trained to come to halt by a vigorous will, the servant of a tender conscience; who has learned to love all beauty, whether of nature or of art, to hate all vileness and to respect others as himself. Such a one, and no other, has had a liberal education.

The art of being able to make good use of moderate abilities often confers more reputation than real merit.—Rochefoucauld.

Impoverished Soil

Impoverished soil, like impoverished blood, needs a proper fertilizer. A chemist by analyzing the soil can tell you what fertilizer to use for different products.

If your blood is impoverished your doctor will tell you what you need to fertilize it and give it the rich, red corpuscles that are lacking in it. It may be you need a tonic, but more likely you need a concentrated fat food, and fat is the element lacking in your system.

There is no fat food that is so easily digested and assimilated as

Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil

It will nourish and strengthen the body when milk and cream fail to do it. Scott's Emulsion is always the same; always palatable and always beneficial where the body is wasting from any cause, either in children or adults.

Cured Beyond All Question.

There were cures for drunkenness in the early days of this country, and from this account in the New York Gazette of May 7, 1772, we are told of a treatment that cured one patient beyond all possible question: "On Saturday last Mr. Montanny's negro man, who had misbehaved himself and was a remarkable drunkard, was sent to Bridewell and underwent the usual discipline of the house for such offenses—viz. a plentiful dose of warm water and salt to operate as an emetic and of lamp oil as a purge, in proportion to the constitution of the patient. Of these he took about three quarts of the one and two and a half spoonfuls of the other; also a gill of New England rum, which operated very powerfully, attended with a violent sickness which obliged him to lie down, and between 8 and 9 at night he was discovered to be dead. He died of excessive drinking, co-operating with discipline and medicine. Mr. Dobbs, the operator, was innocent of his taking off."

Won His Promotion.

The Duke of Clarence, afterward William IV., once received a very adroit and humorous hint which he took in very good part. He was visiting Portsmouth and inspecting the ships there when it happened that his guide over the "seventy-fours" was an aggrieved and battered lieutenant who had waited for promotion many years in vain. He seemed despised and forgotten. As this man removed his hat to salute royalty the duke observed that he was bald and said jestingly:

"I see, my friend, that you have not spared your hair in your country's service."

"Why, your royal highness," was the quick answer, "it's a wonder I have any hair left, for so many young fellows have stepped over my head."

The duke laughed and made his inspection of the fleet, but in a few days his Portsmouth guide received an appointment as captain.

The Mentone Man.

An almost perfect skeleton was found in a cave at Mentone, France, March, 1872. It showed its owner to have been a tall, well formed man, with an average skull and a facial angle of eighty-five degrees. The antiquity of this skeleton, known as the Mentone man, is undoubted. His bones are associated with those of the cave lion, cave bear and other extinct animals. All the bones were in place, surrounded by flint implements and the remains of animals which the man probably had killed. Twenty-two perforated teeth, which may have formed a chaplet, lay by his head. These bones, with the Dutchman's skull found in a cave near Engis, are the oldest specimens known of human remains and go far to prove that prehistoric races were well furnished with brain power.

A Triple Coincidence.

A correspondent of the London Standard relates the following triple coincidence, taken from an old manuscript diary, dated 1842, in which a relative quotes from an "old journal:" "In the year 1664, on Dec. 5, a boat on the Menai (Menai strait, in north Wales) crossing that strait, over which a bridge has since been built, with eighty-one passengers, was upset, and only one passenger, named Hugh Williams, was saved. On the same date, in the year 1785, was upset another boat, containing about sixty passengers, of whom all perished excepting one, whose name was Hugh Williams. On Aug. 5, 1820, a third boat met with the same disaster, with twenty-five passengers only, and all perished with the exception of one, whose name was Hugh Williams."

Boulevard and Esplanade.

Both "esplanade" and boulevard" are military terms by origin. The original "boulevard" was a bulwark or horizontal part of the rampart, and an "esplanade" was originally the glacis or slope of the counterscarp of a fortified place. A writer 200 years ago noted that the word boulevard was "now chiefly taken for the void space between the glacis of a citadel and the first houses of a town;" hence its extension to other "void spaces" suitable for promenading. The old French "esplanade" was defined by Cotgrave as "a planing, leveling, evening of ways," from Latin "explanare," to smooth or flatten out, whence the English words "explain" and "explanation."

Exact Reasoning.

Here is a bit of exact reasoning on the part of a little schoolgirl. The teacher wished to impress the idea of the wrong of idleness. He led up to it by asking who were the persons who got all they could and did nothing in return. For some time there was silence, but at last the little girl, who had obviously reasoned out the answer inductively from her own home experiences, exclaimed, with a good deal of confidence, "Please, sir, it's the baby!"

His Object.

"I can recommend you to a good lawyer."

"All right, but don't let him be too good. I'm trying to conduct my business so as to keep out of jail, not so as to go in lawyer."—Boston Post.

The Start.

Judge—Were you present when the trouble started between the man and his wife? Witness—Yessir. I was at deir weddin', ef dat's whut yo' means, sah.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

The Only Safe Place.

"Can you lay this carpet so the children won't wear it out?"

"Where shall I put it, madam—on the roof?"—Harper's Bazar.

Oats were not known to the Hebrews or the Egyptians.

Chotohasree at the Gymkhana.

In "Modern India" the author, William Eleroy Curtis, records his meeting with the word gymkhana and "ventures to say that nobody who has not been in India can guess what that means."

And if you want another conundrum, what is a chotohasree? It is customary for smart people to have their chotohasree at the gymkhana, and I think you would be pleased to join them after taking the beautiful drive which leads to the place. Nobody knows where the word was derived from, but it is used to describe a country club—a bungalow hidden under a beautiful grove on the brow of a cliff that overlooks the bay—with all of the appurtenances, golf links, cricket grounds, racket courts and indoor gymnasium, and everybody stops there on an afternoon drive to have chotohasree, which is the local term for afternoon tea and for early morning coffee.

Books were originally made of boards or of the inner bark of trees.

The honor we receive of those who fear and stand in awe of us is no true honor.—Montaigne.

Too Serious.

While a great many persons probably take themselves too seriously, entertaining an altogether exaggerated opinion of their ability and worth, not many nowadays go to the extreme length of the German whom the English poet Coleridge met at Frankfort. He always took off his hat when he ventured to speak of himself. Were this practice to become general what a number of people would be permanently bareheaded!

Boarding a Hansom.

Have you ever noticed the right way to get into a hansom when two people are riding? Few persons have learned to do. In three cases out of ten the one who enters first seats himself on the off side. But this is wrong. If, on getting in first, you take the near seat your companion can then enter in ease and comfort, which otherwise he could not.

Masculine.

Mrs. Hix—Mrs. June strikes me as being entirely too masculine for a woman. Mrs. Dix—Yes, indeed. Why, every time she has an ache or a pain she makes as much fuss about it as a man would.

This will be another gala week of the great bargain sale of high-grade clothing. Nothing like this sale was ever witnessed in Fulton and vicinity before, and you may never have the chance of buying good, honest, reliable Men's Suits and Overcoats for 50 cents on the dollar. People that are wise know the value of a dollar and the way they are carrying away these high-grade Suits and Overcoats is proof positive that the bargains are genuine. AMUSEMENTS.

"A Romance of Coon Hollow" now in its eleventh season, is a very lively comedy drama with a well told, absorbing story, plenty of fun, and likewise excitement, and when done with a good cast and the necessary scenic environments—as we can safely promise in the case before us—there is no better vehicle of entertainment now available. The old comedy has been revised and improved, and is now given with entire special new scenery from the brush of Mr. Frank Platzer of the New York Academy of Music, and, besides a dramatic cast of unusual merit, it has the assistance of a quartette and a troupe of pickaninny dancers. The torpedo sensation in "Coon Hollow" has never been excelled as a piece of stage realism and the Cotton Press tragedy is certainly impressive. "A Romance of Coon Hollow" comes to Stephens Opera House on Saturday evening, Nov. 11. Prices 25, 35 and 50 cents. Seats now on sale at Watson's drug store and Pollard's shoe store.

When you want a pleasant physic try Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. They are easy to take and produce no griping or other unpleasant effect. Sold by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Mark of Respect for Flag.

That the Star Spangled Banner, when played at an army post, will be received hereafter with additional mark of respect is a decision of the War department, it having been concluded to prescribe a salute to be tendered when the national anthem is played, the position of a salute being retained during the playing of the air. Hitherto it has been the custom of soldiers and officers merely to stand at attention when the national anthem is played.

NICOTINE CLUB.

Jollification Meeting in Honor of Mayor-elect John M. Foster -- Conspiracy Revealed and Conspirator Rewarded--List of Appointments--Popular Song Revised.

A special meeting of the Nicotine Club was held last Thursday evening at the home of Mr. J. A. Foster on South Fourth street, every member but one being present. It was a ratification as well as a jollification meeting in honor of Brother John M. Foster, a charter member of the club, who was elected Mayor of the city on Tuesday.

The early part of the evening was spent in fighting the battle over again and showering congratulations upon the Mayor-elect. There were many humorous incidents of the campaign discussed which would make mighty interesting reading if publication were permissable, and then the "Thoughtful Three" were deputed to make out a slate for Mayor-elect Foster's appointments, and although he protested violently at having no voice in the matter, he was given to understand that the Club had placed him where he was and intended to reap any little advantage that might accrue. When the following schedule of appointments were voted upon and unanimously adopted, it was found that really John had no kick coming, every Foster on this side of the grave being provided for:

Board of Public Works, G. C. Webb, J. A. Foster, C. M. Allen; Superintendent of Public Works, Richard Carr; clerk to the Board of Public Works, W. P. Hillick; Superintendent of Plumbers, F. M. Darrow; City Chamberlain, Newell H. Gilbert; City Clerk, Langdon C. Foster; Board of Fire and Police, John D. Foster, C. Earl Foster, C. F. Foster; Civil Service Board, G. G. Chauncey, H. P. Allen, Amos Yoemans; Board of Health, J. A. Foster, C. F. Foster, L. C. Foster; City Physician, Dr. H. L. Lake; School Superintendent, James R. Fairgrieve; School Commissioner at Large, Monument Commissioner, Whistle Commissioner, Superintendent of Parks and Commissioner of Deeds at Large, F. D. VanWagenen; to fill vacancies, G. C. Webb; inspector of hot air and gas, W. E. Hughes.

The regulation supper was then served—hot dog and coffee—to which was added on this occasion a liberal dose of cold comfort for one of the associate members. He took his medicine.

At the conclusion of the supper, while red-fire cigars were being enjoyed, Brother Carr rose and was allowed to make the following remarks:

"Mr. President and gentlemen: You all know that it has been the custom and the privilege of the Nicotine Club for many years to sway and even dominate the destinies of Fulton. Nothing of public importance is ever submitted to the electors, or even seriously considered, until it has been scrutinized and passed upon by our political and social censors. As a consequence of this unique and extraordinary position held by the club, we have, as you know, been importuned from time to time to allow our members to fill various positions of trust and responsibility in the community. I will not weary you with a tedious recital of all the high offices held by Nicotines during the last twenty years. Suffice it to say that every office of any account has been efficiently and honorably filled by a member of the Nicotine Club.

"Once again the club was called upon—this time to fill the highest executive office in the city—and most nobly and patriotically did it respond. At a recent secret session of the "Silent Six" it was decreed that a Democrat be pushed into prominence this time, and Worthy Brother John M. Foster was selected. The "Silent Six" also decreed that, to cloak the designs of the club from the vulgar gaze—to add interest to the contest and give spice to the event—one of our associate members be deputed to work with the opposition candidate, with the understanding that votes be made for the club candidate. This honor was accorded Brother VanWagenen, and you all know how nobly he rose to the occasion and justified his selection. While apparently working with and for our honorable opponent, his whole course of conduct during this campaign was unselfishly calculated with extreme nicety to win votes for Foster.

"That Brother Foster and all of us are under deep obligations to Mr. VanWagenen goes without saying, and I have here a slight testimonial of our appreciation. It is a musical instrument dear to the heart of every Nicotine and especially so to Brother Fred.

"Permit me to present to you, Mr. VanWagenen, this beautiful syren whistle, which has been carefully tuned to harmonize with the little early risers of the mills and factories, with which you are so fondly familiar."

Mr. VanWagenen was visibly affected, although not touched so effectively as on the previous Tuesday. He made a really clever little speech in reply and swore to cherish the penny whistle as one of his dearest possessions.

A new song was added to the club repertoire, "Nobody worked but Freddy," composed by Brother L. C. Foster, which was sung with all the vim the club is master of. The usual patriotic airs and club choruses closed one of the most enjoyable of recent Nicotine meetings.

COMMON COUNCIL.

A meeting of the Common Council was held last Thursday evening, when alleged grievances were heard on assessments for paving on South Third and South Fourth streets. F. D. VanWagenen appeared before the Board and stated that the assessment levied on his property on South Fourth street, between Pratt and Division, was too much. He had been assured by the former Board of Public Works that the cost of the street improvement would not exceed $500. It now stands at $648.

Theodore H. Webb, President of the Board of Public Works, was present and said that the property of Mr. VanWagenen was improved as much as that adjacent to it, and that in all respects the assessment was fair and just. Thomas Hunter, the President of the Board of Works when the alleged agreement was made, was called, and he said that he and the other members of the old Board of Works had assured Mr. VanWagenen that his share of the cost would not exceed $500, and that he is aware of the fact that they erred in so doing. He said he stood willing to contribute toward making up this excess, and that he was sure that the other members of the former board were also of the same mind.

Mayor Brooker stated emphatically that such an agreement was contrary to law; that the city was not obliged to fulfill an illegal contract or agreement made by the officials, and that the assessment should be confirmed by the Council.

Definite action was postponed until Nov. 14.

As a Board of Canvassers the Council declared John M. Foster elected Mayor, J. B. Follan, Supervisor of the First and Sixth Wards; George R. Simons, Supervisor of the Second and Third Wards; George E. Simons, Supervisor of the Fourth and Fifth Wards; John Crahan, Alderman of the First Ward; William Osborne, Alderman of the Second Ward; Charles R. Bennett, Alderman of the Third Ward; Frank B. Dilts, Alderman of the Fourth Ward; Hal McFarland, Alderman of the Fifth Ward; and Daniel Brantan, Alderman of the Sixth Ward as each had received the largest number of votes cast.

A petition from several residents was received asking that the fire limits be extended to include the territory lying between Rochester street and a line drawn from Buffalo street west to First and between First and Second streets. This was laid on the table for future consideration.

President T. H. Webb requested, on behalf of the Board of Public Works, permission to store the wagons, etc., in the rear of the City Hall, and the request was granted, after which the grievance meeting adjourned to November 14, and the Council reconvened to canvass the votes of the recent election.

Upon motion, $100 was voted to the G. A. R., the reports of the Chamberlain and Commissioner of Charities were accepted. $1,000 was transferred from the excise to the police fund and $500 to the poor fund.

In Aid of City Hospital.

The annual donation for the City Hospital will be held Nov. 27, 28 and 29, in the vacant store in the Opera House block. The store will be open to receive donations each day from 9 to 6 o'clock, thus giving everybody ample time to contribute. It is intended to make the annual donation an important feature of hospital work. The Fulton hospital, like all others, is to a great degree, dependent for support on the gifts of a generous public. Anything in the line of vegetables, groceries, provisions of all kinds, old linen, money, or articles used in hospital work, will be thankfully received and acknowledged. It is hoped that a special effort will be made to make the second hospital donation a memorable one.

Formal Opening of Public Library.

President Redhead and the trustees of the Public Library deeply regret the delay in the formal opening of the library building. No fault can be found with Contractor Wadsworth, who has been very much annoyed by failure on the part of the firm supplying the oak for interior decoration for the rooms, doors and windows, to deliver the material on schedule time. The work on the building is progressing favorably, however, and it is hoped it will be completed and ready for dedication sometime during the first part of December.

Fulton's Boy Detective.

The youths under sixteen years of age in this city, have been full of zeal since the advertisement of Harry A. Allen's first appeared in The Times, announcing that a suit of clothes would be given the boy who first discovered the agent for Xtragood clothing, when he appeared in Fulton. Each boy became a juvenile sleuth but it was left for Langford Holden, son of Mrs. Cora Holden, to locate the man and say to him the mystic words which should reveal his identity and incidentally produce the suit of clothing. Mr. Allen made good when the agent and Langford appeared in his store together, and the boy was soon fitted out in a suit "fit for a king," which he proudly displays to his companions. Mr. Allen is sole agent in Fulton for the incomparable childrens garments made by the firm of Ederheimer, Stein & Co.

PARTY LOYALTY DISCUSSED.

Interesting Public Meeting in State Street M. E. Church.

A unique and interesting public meeting was held on Monday evening in the State Street M. E. Church, the purpose being to discuss freely and frankly the following question, "Is an elector obligated to vote for men nominated and measures approved by the conventions of his party." The leaders in the discussion were Mr. E. R. Redhead and Attorney W. S. Hillick. Others who participated in the discussion were the Rev. S. D. Robinson, Prof. Coates, and Messrs. David Brown, F. Haskins, F. Vogelgesang, Paul Greenwood and F. D. Van Wagenen, while questions were raised by a number in the audience. The entire proceeding was carried on in an amicable spirit. The consensus of opinion was that while political parties were needful, yet in local affairs considerable independence of party lines should be allowed. It was decided to hold another meeting on Friday evening, Nov. 24, at 7.30 o'clock, to discuss the question, "Who is responsible for the liquor traffic?" Mr. John Hunter and Prof. Coates have been invited to open the discussion.

SHOCKING ACCIDENT.

Wallace Wells Loses Arm at Paper Mill, Which Unconsciously...

Last Saturday afternoon, Wallace Wells, aged 70, was engaged in his duties around a "slitter" in the Fulton Paper Mill, his right arm [illegible] in a shaft pulley and torn from the shoulder socket. The groans of the unfortunate man were the first intimation his co-workers had of the accident, and when they found him he was unconscious. He was removed to the hospital and an operation was performed by Dr. A. [illegible] Hall, assisted by Drs. F. E. [illegible] and N. H. Haviland.

The patient's life could not be saved and he succumbed to his injuries Monday morning. He is survived by his widow and three sisters—Mrs. Quigg of Oswego, Mrs. Hardy of East Syracuse and Mrs. Dennis [illegible] of Baltimore. The funeral services were held this afternoon from the late residence on Worth street, and were conducted by the Rev. John Richards.

AMUSEMENTS.

Joseph Murphy's Famous Play, "Kerry Gow," with Allen Doone and a Strong Cast.

This play is of the sort that is taking the place of the low Irish farce which has of recent years been dictated to self respecting Hibernians all over the country.

The true Irish spirit came in with the Gaelic revival, and Irish comedy everywhere is out-growing the monkey-faced Pat of the cartoon.

But "Kerry Gow" is not a new play. Joe Murphy played a part in the original copyright and fourteen years had the play recopyrighted for himself. This is the only play ever on the stage which has been played [illegible] successive years, and Joe Murphy probably the only actor [illegible] who has played in a single [illegible] so often.

Mr. Allen Doone will [illegible] next Thursday, Nov. [illegible] Opera House in this [illegible] O'Hara the [illegible] blacksmith, and we are [illegible] given to the part an artistic and [illegible] ful conception.

Prices 25, 35, 50 and 75 cents. Seats now on sale at Watson's drug store, and Pollard's shoe store.

but can be cured if treated in time and the proper remedy is used. Medical authorities have known for a long time that the berry of the Saw Palmetto is one of the best remedial agents known. Vernal Palmettona (Palmetto Berry Wine) is made from a combination of Palmetto berries and seven other vegetable drugs of well known curative properties, and the remedy is meeting with a hitherto unheard of success in the cure of all diseases of the stomach, kidneys, liver and bladder, and the minor ailments that are brought on by diseases of the mucous membrane and impure blood. This remedy works in harmony with nature, and the Vernal Remedy Company, of LeRoy, N. Y., will cheerfully send you, free of charge, a trial bottle and booklet. LOCAL OPTION QUESTIONS.

Oswego Town, Volney and Granby Voted for No License.

There appears to be a dispute over the result of the vote on local option in Oswego Town. The Prohibition party claims a victory for no license by one vote, and assert that the returns on file in the Town Clerk's office verify that fact. Those who favored license are desirous of a recount and an action may be commenced to bring the question into court, if the contention that no license carried is upheld.

The town of Volney that last year voted for license, changed about and went dry. Granby voted for no license.

...A REVOLUTION...

Is in progress at 224 S. Salina street, Syracuse, the place "Where Style Reigns Supreme." Hundreds and hundreds of people have been in the habit of buying their Cloaks, Suits, Skirts, Waists and Furs at stores which secure their stocks "on time." They have paid high prices at these stores, because those dealers who buy on credit must charge good, round prices in order to make any profit whatever. BUT A REVOLUTION IS TAKING PLACE. That is why crowds of buyers are more numerous here this Fall than ever before. That is why our force of clerks has doubled in the past six months. We buy in tremendous quantities. Our chain of busy stores includes all the largest cities in the country. No matter how vast our purchases, they are all paid for on the spot. That is why

Now, therefore in conformity with our ancient custom, I, Frank W. Higgins, Governor, do hereby designate Thursday, the thirtieth day of November, 1905, as a day of general Thanksgiving to Almighty God for the great benefits that we have received at His hands.

The Change In Russia

What Rights the People Possessed and What They Will Now Receive. Downfall of Pobedonostzeff, the Foe of Reform.

IN the czar's proclamation to the people of Russia granting a constitutional regime, freedom of conscience, liberty of speech and of person and other reforms he virtually declared that he was no longer an absolute monarch. He has made high sounding proclamations couched in fair words before, but has never until now yielded to the contention that he should surrender his claims as an autocratic ruler. In the recent pronunciamento he directed his government, of which Count Witte is now the head, to "establish as an unchangeable rule that no law shall be enforceable without the approval of the state douma and that it shall be possible for the elected representatives of the people to exercise real participation in the supervision of the legality of the acts of the authorities appointed by us."

In this clause one finds the kernel of the whole subject. In former decrees the Russian emperor carefully guarded against promising his subjects real participation in their government and reserved to himself sovereign power, giving only advisory powers to representatives of the people.

Under the regime existing until a short time ago the emperor was an absolute ruler, having entire control of the legislative, executive and judicial functions of government and irresponsible for their exercise. Since the time of Peter I. the czar has been head of the church. The administration of the empire has for many years been conducted under the control of the emperor's private cabinet by four great councils. The first of these bodies is the council of the empire, established in 1810 by Alexander I., a purely consultative body consisting of a president and over eighty members. Another council is the senate, which is not a legislative assembly, but the high court of justice of the empire, controlling all the legal tribunals. Next comes the holy synod, established by Peter I. in 1721 and having jurisdiction over religious affairs. The fourth administrative body is the council of ministers. Below these councils there are numerous administrative institutions, but as all have been subject to the dictates of the emperor or his immediate subordinates the whole system will be subject to change in the new plan of constitutional government.

One of the most important events connected with the Russian crisis is the resignation of Constantine Pobedonostzeff, procurator general of the holy synod. This body is composed of several bishops and archbishops, but the procurator general, though a lay functionary, has been accustomed, especially since the time of Pobedonostzeff, to exercise more power than all the clergy put together. The Russian Orthodox church is a branch of the ancient Greek church, and the holy synod is a comparatively modern institution which has usurped powers formerly exercised by the bishops. It has often been used by the monarchs to carry out unworthy ends, thus bringing scandal on the church. There is a movement for reform within the Russian church, and one of its objects is to curb the powers of the procurator general and restore to the bishops their former prerogatives. This, it is hoped, may prepare the way for the removal of the obstacles which have prevented the Russian church from keeping step with progress in the world in general. One of the leaders of the movement is Antonius, metropolitan of St. Petersburg, a vigorous opponent of the former procurator general. Pobedonostzeff is one of the best hated men in Russia, for he has been one of the stoutest upholders of autocratic claims and a foe to all progress, civil and religious. When the czar issued a pronunciamento declaring religious freedom some months ago, by virtue of which many sects rejoiced in the possession of greater liberties, it was Antonius and his supporters who obtained the reforms from the emperor against the wishes of the procurator general. Under the provisions of the new decree it is believed that all sects will enjoy greater freedom.

Under the new regime the emperor's private cabinet will be supplanted by a cabinet of ministers having relation to the imperial assembly, or douma. At the head of the cabinet will be its president, or premier, and it is this officer who in the present crisis, in the person of Count Witte, will exercise the greatest power in the realm.

LAURIER'S ELOQUENCE.

The Canadian Premier Owes Much of His Power to His Silver Tongue.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier is much interested in the movement to protect the forests of Canada and as premier of the Dominion extended an invitation to forestry associations of the United States to participate in the forestry conference at Ottawa. Even on such a comparatively prosaic subject as the preservation of trees Premier Laurier can be eloquent. He is not only an impassioned speaker, but he is polished and scholarly in his style and ever ready with anecdote or illustration or apt retort. Some of his most eloquent efforts have been called forth by debates in parliament touching upon a problem ever present in Canada, the blending of the races and creeds and nationalities existing in the Dominion. He is a French Canadian himself, but his popularity is by no means confined to the people of French descent in the province of Quebec. Near where he was born in 1841, in the parish of St. Lin, Quebec, was a Scotch settlement. Sir Wilfrid was greatly influenced as a boy by these thrifty neighbors. It has been his most ardent desire to see descendants of English, Scotch, French and Irish dwelling together harmoniously in Canada and marching forward to the highest achievements as a nation. He expressed these ideas felicitously in a speech delivered not long ago when he said:

SIR WILFRID LAURIER.

"At the queen's jubilee I had the privilege of visiting one of those marvels of Gothic architecture which the hand of genius, guided by an unerring faith, had made a harmonious whole, in which granite, marble, oak and other materials were blended. This cathedral is the image of the nation I hope to see Canada become. As long as I live, as long as I have the power to labor in the service of my country, I shall repel the idea of changing the nature of its different elements. I want the marble to remain the marble; I want the granite to remain the granite; I want the oak to remain the oak. I want the sturdy Scotchman to remain the Scotchman; I want the brainy Englishman to remain the Englishman; I want the warm hearted Irishman to remain the Irishman. I want to take all these elements and build a nation that will be foremost among the great powers of the world."

CZARINA AND HER BOY.

Anxious Time In Russia For the Empress—Her Interesting Family.

It is the belief of many that in surrendering to the party of freedom in Russia and proclaiming a constitution and parliament for that long oppressed realm the Emperor Nicholas II. saved his throne for his infant son, the Grand Duke Alexis. The ancient house of the Romanoffs was in grave danger of coming to an end when the czar yielded and abandoned the extreme autocratic claims he has clung to so tenaciously through years of social and political unrest.

The situation of the empress and her boy has been an unenviable one during the Russian crisis. She never knew at what hour the czar and possibly she and her children as well would become the victims of bombs. It was reported at one time that the czarina had fled with the Grand Duke Alexis to the court of her brother at Darmstadt. She was formerly Princess Alix of Hesse and, besides the young grand duke who is the heir apparent, has four little girls, ranging in age from three to nine years.

Studying Nature.

The thing to aim at in studying the beauties of nature, as is the case with all artistic pleasures, is the perception [illegible] the people who [illegible] have an appreciation of natural scenery cannot appreciate it except on a sensational scale. They can derive a certain pleasure from wide prospects of startling beauty, rugged mountains, steep gorges, great falls of water—all the things that are supposed to be picturesque. But, though this is all very well as far as it goes, it is a very elementary kind of thing. The perception of which I speak is a perception which can be fed in the most familiar scene, in the shortest stroll, even in a momentary glance from a window. The things to look out for are little accidents of light and color, little effects of chance grouping, the transfiguration of some well known and even commonplace object, such as is produced by the sudden burst into greenness of the trees that peep over some suburban garden wall or by the sunlight falling by a happy accident on pool or flower.—Cornhill.

Why the Horse Heeds the Bugler.

An interesting report regarding the development of the musical sense in horses was made by a committee of German zoologists and botanists. The report says: "The investigations as to the musical sense of horses have shown that that sense is very poorly developed in these animals. It has been proved beyond doubt that horses have no notion whatever of keeping time to music, and that at circuses they do not dance according to the tune, but that the musicians have to keep time according to the steps of the animals.

"Other investigations show that horses do not understand military trumpet signals. It is only the rider or the animal's instinct of imitation which induces horses to make the moves required by the signal, but no horse without a rider, however carefully trained, takes the slightest notice of a trumpet signal, and the same observation has been made on a large number of cavalry horses without riders."

Science of Bell Ringing.

It was Sunday morning, and the bell ringer had just finished ringing the chimes that called the godly to church. "Bell ringing is a science. Did you know that?" he said. "It is called campanology, and there are abstruse and technical terms in it, like 'Kent treble bob,' 'Stedman cinques,' 'double court bob,' 'dodges,' 'noils' and 'stingoes.' Each of these terms defines a certain phase or kind of bell ringing. In England there is a society, the Central Council of Bell Ringers, that every campanologist desires ardently to belong to. Maybe you think bell ringing is simple? Do you know what a peal is? A peal in ringers' parlance is a series of 5,000 changes rung upon a chime, no change occurring more than once."—New York Press.

Children's Names In England.

The vicar of Membury, Derbyshire, writes in his parish magazine, "A hundred and thirty-eight baptisms, and I have not yet had a 'Sarah Jane'—that delightful, old fashioned name!"

Amused, as he said, by the vicar's sad wail, a parishioner replies to the vicar, saying the reason is not far to seek. The custom of the parents residing in these parts is to consult with their incumbent regarding the choice of the name for the offspring.

The natural consequence is that all children born on a saint's day are called after the saint. Thus a girl born on St. George's day would be christened Georgiana and one on St. Clement's day Clementina, and so on.—London Express.

Eels In Scotland.

Although eels abound in Scotch waters and are caught in great quantities, they are not considered fit food there. No matter how plentiful and how very fine and large they may be in any district of Scotland, no native will eat one. The objection to the eel is said to be based on its serpent-like appearance and the fact that it is not overfastidious as to what it feeds on. Tons of choice eels for the London market are taken from streams that are not conspicuously free from sewage.

His First Intimation.

"How did you find out you could draw?" inquired the admirer of the celebrated illustrator.

"By the marks I received in school for the excellence and fidelity of my work," replied the eminent one. "My work was a caricature of my beloved teacher on the blackboard and the marks came from the teacher's cane."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Pessimist.

"Don't be too anxious to get a husband," said the wise matron. "Don't go around hunting for one."

"Think I should just sit down and wait for one, eh?" replied the maiden.

"Yes, for you'll sit up and wait for one often enough after you've got him."

Quite Natural.

Husband—What did you think when you heard the chandelier fall last night? Wife—Why, I thought you had been detained on business again and were getting upstairs as quietly as you could.

Looking Forward.

"Progress is becoming extremely rapid."

"Yes, indeed. In the year 3000 or so lightning will have to get a move on if it wants to be considered fast."

Lucky Patients.

"Did you ever make any mistakes, doctor?"

"Well, I've had several patients get well that I expected would die."

THE LOST ARTS.

Many Abandoned Devices Now Knowledge Makes Them Useless.

[illegible] as we used to, but occasionally even yet, one hears of some wonder accomplished by the ancients which cannot be done now.

Not so many years ago it was quite commonly asserted that modern workmen could not quarry or, having quarried, could not handle stones as large as the monoliths of Egypt, and the writer has heard a public speaker of note assert that it would be impossible to handle with modern implements such large stones as were used in the pyramids or to join them as perfectly as they are joined there. Yet, when occasion arose, larger stones than any of the larger monoliths themselves were transported not only to the sea, but across it, and erected in England, France and America, and there are individuals today who might, if they chose, cause the transportation to and erection in this country of the largest pyramids or build new ones ten times larger and more durable. Pyramids are not being generally built nowadays because they are not in line with the trend of modern ambition; that's all.

It is very doubtful if a "Damascus blade" would stand half as severe usage as a modern band saw blade or even as much as the spring of a forty cent clock, while the ornamentations of those wondrous blades, so far as the mechanical execution is concerned, can be excelled by apprentices and amateurs of today.

Of the "lost art" of hardening copper little is heard of late years, though one occasionally hears a wiseling from the wilds wish that he knew how to do it as well as the ancients, and while it is perhaps regrettable that he doesn't his ignorance is his own fault.

Many arts and devices have been abandoned because new knowledge has made them useless, and time spent in rediscovering them would be worse than wasted. The modern youth had much better spend his time studying the art of his contemporaries than that which is "lost."—Scientific American.

Sociable Spiders.

Spiders have been observed in Madras which live in a sponge-like nest of branching network, penetrated internally by canals of communication and furnished with a number of external apertures. The nests, which may be attached either to the tips of branches or to leaves of the prickly pear, are ashy gray in color and constructed of leaves, with an external covering of the usual sticky threads. The spiders are similar in color to their nests. Their inconspicuous, sheet-like webs radiate in all directions, and as many as five or six nests, connected by intermediate webs, may be found on a single plant. The connecting webs, which are very strong, often form tubular bridges between the nests. From forty to a hundred spiders may be found in a single nest, and males and females inhabit the same nest in the proportion of about seven to one.

How the Bulldog Was Evolved.

In the north hall of the British Natural History museum skulls of domesticated dogs are arranged which illustrate the evolution of the modern bulldog from a breed which, according to old pictures, was more of the mastiff type. Bull baiting was a common sport in the thirteenth century, and there is a later record which draws a distinction between bulldogs and mastiffs. Low, in his "Domesticated Animals of the British Islands," points out that it is essential that a dog which makes a frontal attack on a bull should be both underhung and short legged, that it may get a firm grip of its antagonist and avoid its horns. We may therefore be sure that, as the bulldog was gradually evolved from the mastiff, these points were held to be of prime importance.

MAYOR-ELECT JOHN M. FOSTER.

John M. Foster, the mayor-elect of this city, enjoys a reputation for sound judgment, rugged honesty and civic pride, which augers well. He has had a pace set by his predecessor, Mayor Brooker, for efficiency, economy and progression, which he will maintain. In his appointments, he will undoubtedly select men of worth and ability, so that our city may not suffer by the change of administration. There are many rumors on the streets regarding the selection of a cabinet, but Mr. Foster informs the TIMES that he has not yet made a choice.

The Common Council stands four Republicans to two Democrats, but all the members-elect have the city's interests at heart and they will strengthen the hands of the chief executive.

CUBA'S surplus is $21,000,000 and is constantly increasing.

THE Philadelphia Press asks "what is the proper punishment for a man who sells impure food?" Make him eat it.

A Baltimore city official has protested against having his salary increased. Deputations of office holders from other cities are on their way to the Monumental City to have a look at the phenomenon.

MR. ROCKEFELLER'S humor improves steadily of late. He used to feel like a sponge, he says. Then he was on the make. Since he has commenced to hand out, he says he feels like a pump.

FREE speech has had an intoxicating effect in Russia, and it may be some time before the people can grow accustomed to it The truth, however, has dawned on them that the only way to obtain suffrage is to take it.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT greatly pleased the South. He talked the sort of politics to which the people are not accustomed, and showed them it is possible for a President to remember he is the head of the nation, and not of some particular party.

IT is sincerely hoped that the Corrupt Practices bill, which is pending in the State Legislature, will become a law. It is aimed to correct some of the flagrant abuses that are now prevalent in the primaries and at the polls. If reports are true there was a shameful use of money in this city during the municipal election to thwart the will of the people. For the sake of good, clean, civic government, it is hoped that on another occasion efforts will be made to obtain evidence against men who boast that they can buy a ward, and also against any inclined to aid them in their nefarious schemes.

DON'T GET RUSTY.

Keep Your Moral, Mental and Physical Machinery Working.

The machine that lies idle is far more liable to injury than the machine that runs.

Air and dampness do more damage than wear and tear. Let the machine remain inactive awhile, and the coating formed by the corrosion soon covers the bright metal and the parts become stiff and cranky.

A man neglects the working parts of this body. Normally these parts should be exercised. He indulges his members in idleness. Whatever vitality and working force they may have had when in continued use, neglect causes the machinery to run stiffly. It is the rust.

A man may neglect to exercise his working brain forces. He may have ever so quick a mind, but if he does not use his mental machinery the rust of idleness is soon over it.

A man may neglect to use the moral forces that are in him. There is a weakening somewhere. The machine lets down. And soon the parts are rusted.

When the primary or the convention or the ballot box, working parts of government, are neglected the rust collects. The machinery works poorly. It may break down.

Keep your body working without friction by systematic exercise.

Keep your mind bright by using it.

Keep your soul clean by working it.

And so for society nine-tenths of its evils are caused by the idleness of its necessary working parts.—Chicago Journal.

A Shoe That Altered History.

After the fall of Anne Boleyn the pope prepared overtures of reconciliation so favorable to King Henry VIII. that he determined to accept them. A representative was sent from Rome with the dispatches, and when within a day's journey from Calais his horse cast a shoe and fell lame. As it was a favorite, the messenger determined to wait a day that the poor animal might rest and recover. Next day the journey was resumed, but on the day that London was reached Henry had been married to Jane Seymour, a Protestant, Anne had been beheaded, and all hope of reconciliation with the papacy was at an end. The cast shoe had thus changed the bent of English church history.

Scientific American gives this recipe for waterproofing for canvas: Soft soap dissolved in hot water and a solution of iron sulphate added. The sulphuric acid combines with the potash of the soap and the iron oxide is precipitated with the fatty acid as insoluble iron soap. It is washed and dried and

People Talked About

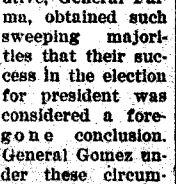
Rear Admiral Train—Gomez of Cuba. New Post For Edwards—Mrs. Carnegie at Home—W. W. Russell.

WHEN Rear Admiral Charles J. Train and his son, Lieutenant Charles R. Train, went hunting pheasants in the vicinity of Nankin, capital of the province of Kiangsi, in China, they little thought that one of their shots would be heard around the world, but it chanced that a native woman was peppered with a charge intended for birds, and the incident almost caused international complications. Lieutenant Train was seized and detained by a mob of Chinese who were angered by the accident, and, though he was afterward released and an apology was made by the governor of Nankin to the Americans, the incident has not tended to increase good feeling toward Americans in China. Coming at the time when the boycott against American goods is in progress and when the anti-foreign feeling has resulted in the murder of missionaries, the accident is regarded as doubly unfortunate.

REAR ADMIRAL C. J. TRAIN.

Admiral Train is commander in chief of the Asiatic squadron. He is a native of Massachusetts and graduated from the Naval academy in 1864. He commanded the auxiliary cruiser Prairie in the Spanish war and later the Puritan and Massachusetts and is regarded as one of the scientists of the navy.

The wounding of Chinese by hunters about Nankin as well as at various other places along the Chinese coast is a common thing, and it is said that some Chinese make a practice of getting in front of fine bird shot. If they are hit the matter is usually squared by the payment of a small sum.



The visit to the United States of Senor Jose Miguel Gomez, candidate of the Liberal party for president of Cuba, has attracted especial attention because of the peculiar conditions under which he came to this country. He is governor of the province of Santa Clara and in May last was nominated for president by the Liberals. In the elections for boards of registry in September the Moderates, whose candidate for president is the present executive, General Palma, obtained such sweeping majorities that their success in the election for president was considered a foregone conclusion. General Gomez under these circumstances decided to retire from the field. He avers, however, that his opponents have resorted to fraud and coercion in order to win and that 80 per cent of the Cubans are really in favor of his election as president. He resolved to pay a visit to the United States in order to obtain rest.

JOSE MIGUEL GOMEZ.

Senor Gomez is a man of about fifty years of age and is a native of Santa Clara province. He is of medium height, stocky figure and has dark hair and mustache. He participated in two revolutions, reaching the rank of major in the first and that of major general in the second. He was a delegate to the Cuban constitutional convention and was one of the commissioners sent to Washington to advise as to a practicable method of dissolving the Cuban revolutionary army.

There is talk in Washington of the creation of a new cabinet officer to take charge of matters now handled by the bureau of insular affairs. This is a branch of the government that has come into being and grown to importance since the Spanish war, and it is thought by many that the problems arising in connection with the administration of Porto Rico, Hawaii, the Philippines and the canal zone of the isthmus of Panama are of sufficient magnitude and moment to demand the sole attention of a member of the cabinet. Hitherto a great deal of responsibility in this connection has devolved on Judge Taft as secretary of war. His right hand man is Colonel Clarence R. Edwards, the present chief of the bureau of insular affairs, who, it is said, will become the new secretary if another cabinet office is created. Colonel Edwards is a graduate of West Point and saw hard fighting in the Philippines. When he was a lieutenant he had charge of the battalion which for many months was placed as a guard around the temporary tomb of Garfield, and a story is told that at the lieutenant's suggestion and under his supervision a weird and extraordinary thing was done at that tomb. Plenty of evidence was furnished of intentions to get the remains of Garfield and hold them for a ransom. The lieutenant at last suggested that Garfield's remains be removed secretly, so that even if the would be thieves got access to the tomb they would be foiled. His father and two or three other citizens of Cleveland who were friends of Garfield approved the plan, and one night they took the casket from the temporary sarcophagus and placed it in a vault. Then another casket was filled with a sufficient amount of earth to give it weight, and that one was placed in the temporary Garfield tomb. Thousands of persons for more than a year visited that tomb and gazed sorrowfully upon the sarcophagus, which, it is said, contained nothing but an earth filled casket. Garfield's remains were removed to their permanent abiding place, as everybody supposed, from the temporary tomb, whereas they were in fact taken from another vault.

COLONEL CLARENCE R. EDWARDS.

There is a story that Andrew Carnegie was disappointed in love as a young man. At any rate, the great steelmaker did not marry until late in life, and when he did wed he secured a helpmeet worth waiting for a long time. When he married Miss Louise Whitfield in 1887 he presented her as a wedding gift a house and $20,000 a year. He was then fifty and his bride about twenty years his junior. Even before her marriage to the laird of Skibo she was well known for her interest in charity and has been a great help to her husband in dispensing his large wealth in ways where it would do the most good. Mr. and Mrs. Carnegie do not care much for fashionable society or the allurements which attract the smart sets of New York and London, but they take much pleasure in entertaining their chosen friends at Skibo or in the recently completed mansion on Fifth avenue. She enjoys golf and other open air diversions as much as her husband does, they frequently play billiards together, and both are now very much wrapped up in the training of their little eleven-year-old daughter Margaret. This small maiden had the distinction of being kissed by King Edward not long ago when the British monarch visited Skibo. She showed him all the wonders of her doll house. Although her father has so many millions, little Miss Margaret is not permitted to spend much upon herself, and Mr. Carnegie is determined that she shall not be spoiled.

MRS. ANDREW CARNEGIE.

William W. Russell, who has been commissioned to extend the good offices of the United States in the matter of the settlement of the difficulties between France and Venezuela, was appointed minister to the latter country to succeed Herbert W. Bowen. He is no stranger in Venezuela, as he was secretary of the American legation at Caracas for eight years, serving under both Minister Loomis and Minister Bowen. Notwithstanding these two gentlemen left Venezuela under strained relations with the government there, Mr. Russell managed to retain his popularity. He served as minister to Colombia prior to his promotion to the Venezuelan mission. Mr. Russell in replying to the congratulations of friends in Washington when the news of his appointment was announced said: "I appreciate your good wishes, and I will try to do well in my new place. In new places we all with hard work may do well. Now and then, before unexpected and unprecedented crises, we may err, but there is no need for us to err greatly—to err, for instance, as did the new waitress of a friend of mine.

W. W. RUSSELL.

"This waitress was willing, but inexperienced. The first day she prospered. The second day, having developed a good deal of faith in her, my friend gave a dinner party, and there she committed a tremendous solecism. She was, it seems, a little short of forks. After each course she should have taken the soiled forks and washed and dried them in the pantry in a pan of hot water prepared for that purpose.

"But, alas, instead of adopting any such method as that the waitress, as she removed the plates after the fish course, said to the assembled guests in a loud, authoritative voice:

"'All keep yer forks!'"

Charles G. Dawes, who is slated to succeed Leslie M. Shaw as secretary of the treasury, is only forty years of age, but he has already won fame as a financier and served the country in the important post of comptroller of the currency. President McKinley appointed him to this post in 1897, and he served until the close of 1901, when he resigned to become a candidate for United States senator from Illinois. The senatorship did not come his way, however, and since leaving the comptrollership Mr. Dawes has been engaged in banking. His predecessor as comptroller of the currency was James H. Eckels. Mr. Eckels was only thirty-five when he took office, and Grover Cleveland incurred much criticism for appointing to so important a post so young a man. But when Mr. Dawes took up the duties of the same post he was only thirty-three. He had, however, given much study to the subject of finance, had written a book on the subject and had served in business posts which brought out his executive capacity and understanding of financial affairs.

CHARLES G. DAWES.

Freedom For Finland

People Not Satisfied by the Czar's Recent Concessions—The Scotland of Scandinavia — Pledge Broken by the Present Emperor.

THE revolution in Russia, which has wrested from an unwilling monarch a constitution and guarantees of an elective assembly, religious liberty and freedom of the press, has proved a boon to oppressed Finland also. It forced the czar to grant a constitutional regime to the Finns and summon their ancient diet in session. Whether these concessions come too late remains to be seen, however, for many of the Finns think that this is the time to make a stand for nothing less than absolute freedom from the rule of Russia, and a movement to that end is in progress.

Finland, where the people sing in their bondage, where they endure and are not subdued, what lover of man has not felt his sympathy quickened at her story? She has only about two and a half million people all told, mostly simple folk—farmers and fishers—yet they have left their impress on the world, have given men a noble epic, the "Kalevala," and have contributed their part to the still nobler epic of freedom. Finland is the Scotland of Scandinavia except that she has long had cruel and greedy Russia for a master instead of England. In the poetic and musical native tongue the country is called "Suomi," the "Land of a Thousand Lakes." It is a beautiful and romantic clime, for it is washed by the Baltic with its innumerable inlets and bays, its "deep, short seas," and on the country's northern boundaries the summer sun never sets. Yet the people are tinged by a melancholy, due both to climate and history. They are a gentle folk on the surface, but in their souls the old viking fierceness is not dead. They love their land. They are united by tradition and misfortune and as one man have opposed the Russification of Finland.

The national feeling among the Finns was never stronger than at present. Though the flag has not until now been allowed to float, the patriots behold in nature the beloved emblems of their land. One poet recently expressed it thus:

"Where the white summer cloud hangs in the blue sky above us, there is the flag of Finland. Where our snow crowned hilltops glitter against heaven, there are our colors. Where a white sail shimmers upon the azure waters, there is our streamer."

Finland has well defined traditions reaching back to the time of the Aryan migration—in fact, her language is much like that which recent researches have discovered to have been the tongue spoken in Mesopotamia. Talk about ancient lineage! What nation in Europe has so good a basis for aristocracy? Yet the Finns are a very democratic people.

In the days of Olaf Tryggwasson, when all of Russia excepting Novgorod was in a state closely bordering on savagery, Finland was a nation. It was then in Pomerania, the fruitful land, and was known as Vendland the Good. It had national integrity in later days, but finally became a grand duchy of Sweden. Then, in 1809, Russia took it away from the weak Swedish king. But for ninety years it was practically free in all but name.

The czar of that day gave the following pledge to the Finns:

Providence having placed us in possession of the grand duchy of Finland, we have desired hereby to confirm and ratify the religion and fundamental laws of the land, as well as the privileges and rights which each class in the said duchy in particular and all inhabitants in general, be their position high or low, have hitherto enjoyed according to the constitution. We promise to maintain all these benefits and laws firm and unshakable in their full force.

The succeeding czars renewed this pledge. It remained for the present emperor, Nicholas II., after having given a similar promise, to break his word and seek the subjugation of Finland. He took from the Finns their army, making their young men serve under the colors and brutal officers of Russia. He deprived the national senate of power and hauled down the Finnish flag. Many of the best citizens of Finland have been exiled. Thousands of these have come to America. Finland petitioned the czar, almost every adult in the land signing the document, but he spurned the petition, even refusing an audience to those who presented it. Tyrannous measures culminated in the infamous reign of Governor General Bobrikoff, who was finally assassinated by a Finnish youth. When the constitutional regime was recently proclaimed, enthusiastic Finns visited the grave of this youth and paid honors to him as to a martyr.

FROM TEACHER TO AUTHOR.

How Myra Kelly Graduated From Her Profession.

Myra Kelly, whose stories of ghetto life have won her a place among the popular writers of fiction, did not dream when she published "Little Citizens" that the book would win her a husband. Indeed, she little thought when she became a teacher in a public school in New York's east side that she would there discover for the literary world a new character, would introduce the reading public to a new dialect and incidentally obtain for herself a niche in the temple of fame. She found in her scholars, their queer ways and comical methods of expressing themselves and in the home life to which after a time they introduced "teacher" a rich mine of literary material. At first "teacher" entertained her friends by telling them of the amusing experiences of the schoolroom. Then it occurred to her that what interested her personal acquaintances might interest the general public, and it did. Among those whom "Little Citizens" interested was a rich and popular young bachelor, Allan Macnaughtan, banker, clubman, cotillon leader, etc. Among his possessions is a charming bungalow-like retreat, surrounded by about 200 acres of park and farm and garden, near Teaneck, N. J., and known as Cedar Ridge. To this country place Mr. Macnaughtan betook himself one afternoon after a strenuous day in Wall street and, to divert his mind from falling stocks, bought a new book at a news stand. He did not expect to be especially amused, but the children whom the writer, in the guise of "Miss Bailey," told about were so entertaining that he spent the whole evening in the company of the book and voted its author, whom he supposed to be a middle aged spinster, very clever.

Not long afterward Mr. Macnaughtan gave a dance at his country place, and among the guests was a Miss Myra Kelly, who chanced to be staying at the house of one of his friends. A chum told him in jest that she was a granddaughter of the author of "Little Citizens." It is said that the host congratulated the blooming girl of twenty-one on her relationship to so gifted a woman, whose stories he greatly admired. Blushes, embarrassment and explanations followed. Acquaintance ripened into love, and the marriage took place in September. Mr. Macnaughtan is now kept busy denying that he is the gentleman in "Little Citizens" who was always "loving mit Miss Bailey."

NEW NEZ PERCE CHIEF.

Gilbert Williams Now Heads Old Chief Joseph's Band.

The new chief of the Nez Perce Indians and the successor of Chief Joseph is Gilbert Williams, who in his tribal costume presents the appearance of a warrior of the olden time. In one respect, however, his appearance differs from that of members of his tribe at the time when they first encountered the French. He wears no ring in his nose, as his ancestors did. It was this custom which led the French to give them their name, Nez Perce, "Pierced Nose." They are the leading tribe of Shahaptian stock and call themselves "Shaptin," but were known as "Chopunnish" to some of the neighboring tribes. They formerly roamed over a large section of eastern Washington and Oregon and central Idaho, and the explorers Lewis and Clark traversed their territory in 1805.

CONSTIPATION CURED.

A Barrytown, N. Y., Man's Experience with Cal-cura Solvent.

Dr. David Kennedy's NEW Medicine Cured Him Promptly.

Constipation leads to worse. Often it is the cause of appendicitis. Always it leads to dangerous chronic disease. It should not be neglected, nor should it be temporarily relieved with drastic purgatives. Here is a case in point:

Mr. C. S. Osterhoudt, of Barrytown, N. Y., was distressed with indigestion, chronic constipation and kidney trouble for four years. He tried many medicines without relief. He heard of Cal-cura Solvent, Dr. Kennedy's new medicine, used it and began to improve rapidly. All of his old complaints have disappeared and he owes everything to Cal-cura Solvent. $1.00; all druggists.

The Solan Geese.

Richard Bell in his book, "My Strange Pets," tells of the solan geese, which in Great Britain in bygone days used to be salted and dried for human food: "Many years ago these dried geese found their way to the lowlands of Scotland and were used as an appetizer. A small portion when eaten before meals was supposed to tickle the appetite. In this connection I have heard a good story: A worthy farmer in the neighborhood gave a dinner party, and when the dinner was in progress he asked one of his guests if he would have 'another portion,' upon which the guest remarked, 'I think I will, as I et a bit o' solan goose afore I left hame and it has made me very hungry,' upon which his neighbor said, 'I dinna believe in these solan geese, for I et a haill yin afore I cam' awa' and I dinna feel a bit the hungrier.'"

The Books of Ancient Persia.

We knew that the Moslems when they conquered Persia found in that country an innumerable quantity of books and scientific treatises and that their general, Saad Ibn Abi Oueccas, asked Caliph Omar by letter if he would allow him to distribute those books among the true believers with the rest of the booty. Omar answered him in these terms: "Throw them into the water. If they contain anything which can guide men to the truth we have received from God what will guide us much better. If they contain errors we shall be well rid of them, thank God!" In consequence of this order the books were thrown into the water and the fire, and the literature and science of the Persians disappeared.—Notices et Extraits.

How to Cure Corns and Bunions.

First, soak the corn or bunion in warm water to soften it; then pare it down as closely as possible without drawing blood and apply Chamberlain's Pain Blam twice daily, rubbing vigorously for five minutes at each application. A corn plaster should be worn a few days to protect it from the shoe. As a general liniment for sprains, bruises, lameness and rheumatism, Pain Balm is unequaled. For sale by H. C. Giesler.

The Atmosphere.

The earth's sensible atmosphere is generally supposed to extend some forty miles in height, probably farther, but becoming at only a few miles from the surface of too great a tenuity to support life. The condition and motions of this aerial ocean play a most important part in the determination of climate, modifying by absorbing the otherwise intense heat of the sun and when laden with clouds hindering the earth from radiating its acquired heat into space.—St. Louis Republic.

Could Not Be Better.

The uniform success of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has won for it a wide reputation and many people throughout the country will agree with Mr. Charles W. Mattison, of Milford, Va., who says: "It works like magic, and is the best preparation I know of. It couldn't be any better." He had a serious attack of dysentery and was advised to try a bottle of this remedy, which he did, with the result that immediate relief was obtained. For sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Just Sneeze Right Out.

"Never suppress a sneeze," said the trained nurse to the young woman who had just performed that polite act. "It is a great strain on all the nerves and blood vessels of the head, as it throws all the action to the back of the head instead of letting it come out of the mouth safely and naturally. The unusual and hard strain on a little blood vessel that may be weak is likely to burst it and cause instant death. A loud sneeze does not sound very nice, but it is a safe thing to do every time."

The Envious Woman.

The train had pulled out of the terminal, and the conductor was on his fare collecting tour. In one car there sat alone a woman dressed in deep mourning, her heavy veil having been lifted to allow a breath of air. When the conductor approached her the woman burst into tears.

As she cried as if her heart would burst the conductor asked her what was the matter. She sobbed this reply: "Ten years ago I took my first husband over this road to be cremated, five years ago I took my second husband on the same trip to the crematory, and now I am taking my third husband to be condemned to ashes."

Just then there were loud sobs heard coming from a seat on the opposite side of the car. The conductor turned and saw another woman crying. Approaching softly, he asked the weeping one, "What is the matter, madam?"

Taking her handkerchief from her eyes, the second in tears answered, "That woman has husbands to burn, while I can't get even one."—Philadelphia Record.

The Senses of the Word.

"She is a lady in every sense of the word," exclaimed Blifkins.

"Then she is the most remarkable woman that ever lived," replied Johnson.

"What do you mean? Aren't there plenty of ladies in the world?"

"Yes, but not in every sense of the word. For instance, if the woman is what you say, she is not only a woman of good family or of good breeding and refinement, but she is also, according to the Century Dictionary, 'a sweetheart (local United States); a slate measuring about sixteen inches broad by ten long; the calcareous apparatus in the cardiac part of the stomach of the lobster, the function of which is the trituration of food.' And if she is all that her fortune is made in the museum line."

After that it was noted that Blifkins usually pruned down the remark to "she is a lady" simply.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Some Seasonable Advice.

It may be a piece of superfluous advice to urge people at this season of the year to lay in a supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is almost sure to be needed before winter is over, and much more prompt and satisfactory results are obtained when taken as soon as a cold is contracted and before it has become settled in the system, which can only be done by keeping the remedy at hand. This remedy is so widely known and so altogether good that no one should hesitate about buying it in preference to any other. It is for sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

A Drawback.

"Did your husband find that golf improved his health?"

"Yes; it improved his health. But unless he learns to play better it will spoil his disposition."—Exchange.

Along the central part of the Kongo river there are a number of salt marshes. The African digs shallow holes in these whence issue streams of hot water, which, on being evaporated, leaves a residue of salt.

A Judicious Inquiry.

A well known traveling man who visits the drug trade says he has often heard druggists inquire of customers who asked for a cough medicine, whether it was wanted for a child or for an adult, and if for a child they almost invariably recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The reason for this is that they know there is no danger from it and that it always cures. There is not the least danger in giving it, and for coughs, colds and croup it is unsurpassed. For Sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

A Brave Sailor.

There is a tablet in the sailors' home at Melbourne to James Marr. He was a sailor before the mast on the Rip. On July 15, 1873, the Rip was caught in a squall. Marr sat astride of the gaff when a great wave broke over the boat and brought down the mainmast. There was only one chance to save the Rip. That was to cut away the litter. But Marr clung to the broken spar, and to cut away meant to send him overboard to death. So, looking at him doubtfully, the men hesitated, their axes in their hands. Marr, helpless, pondered. He saw that his death would be the boat's salvation, and he shouted:

"Cut away, mates! Goodby!"

Then he let himself fall into the cold, wild sea.

A Very Sensitive Lady.

A young lady endowed with the most sensitive nerves mentioned one evening to a few friends assembled in her drawing room that she had a horror of the rose. "The perfume of this flower," said she, "gives me a severe headache and faintness." The conversation was interrupted by the visit of a fair friend who wore a rosebud in her headdress. Our fair heroine turned pale directly, tossed her arms and fell gracefully in a swoon upon the ottoman.

"What a strange nervous susceptibility! What a delicate and impressionable organization!" cried the spectators. "For mercy's sake, madam, go away! Don't you see that you have caused this attack?"

"I?" replied the astonished lady.

"Yes, of course it is the perfume of the rosebud in your hair."

"Really, if it is so I will sacrifice the guilty flower, but judge before you sentence."

The flower, detached from the headdress, was passed from hand to hand among the spectators, but their solicitude soon gave way to a different emotion. The fatal rosebud was an artificial one!—London Leader.

Fate of the Twelve Disciples.

Andrew was probably crucified at Patrae, in Achaia; Bartholomew, said to have been flayed alive and crucified, with head down, in Armenia; James, brother of John, Herod killed him with his sword; James, son of Alpheus, thrown from the temple and stoned to death; John, time of death a conjecture; Judas, said to have hanged himself in a very bungling manner; Jude, said to have died naturally and also claimed to have been martyred; Matthew, claimed as a martyr, but probably died a natural death; Peter, crucified at Rome; Philip, said to have been tortured to death in Greece; Simon (Canaanite), crucified in Judaea in the reign of Domitian; Thomas, probably put to death with a lance in Persia or India.

Do the right thing if you have Nasal Catarrh. Get Ely's Cream Balm at once. Don't touch the catarrh powders and snuffs, for they contain cocaine. Ely's Cream Balm releases the secretions that inflame the nasal passages and the throat, whereas common "remedies" made with mercury merely drive them out and leave you no better than you were. In a word, Ely's Cream Balm is a real cure, not a delusion. All druggists, 50 cents, or mailed by Ely Bros., 56 Warren street, New York.

A Fatal Pun.

According to John Stow, chronicler and antiquary, about 1500, who wrote and published "Summarie of Englysh Chronicles," Sir William Collingwood was executed in 1484 for writing the following political squib, in a manner which, in his day, was considered most excellent wit:

The rat, the cat and Lovel the dog
Rule all England under the Hog.

This was during the reign of Richard III., at a time when the chief agents of his evil schemes were Catesby, Ratcliff and Lovel. Lovel was then a common name for a dog and as a white boar was displayed on the king's escutcheon the reference to a "hog" was obvious and so offensive that it brought about the writer's death.

Every

Two Minutes

Physicians tell us that all the blood in a healthy human body passes through the heart once in every two minutes. If this action becomes irregular the whole body suffers. Poor health follows poor blood; Scott's Emulsion makes the blood pure. One reason why is such a great aid is because it passes so quickly into the blood. It is partly digested before it enters the stomach; a double advantage in this. Less work for the stomach; quicker and more direct benefits. To get the greatest amount of good with the least possible effort is the desire of everyone in poor health. Scott's Emulsion does just that. A change for the better takes place even before you expect it.

A Southern Reminiscence.

In "A Southern Girl In '61" Mrs. D Giraud Wright describes the burial of the young hero, Latane, one of the most dramatic and touching incidents in the story of the Confederacy. He died leading a gallant charge.

"John Latane, a lieutenant in his brother's company, took charge of the body and, with a cart and driver, tried to return to Richmond. Finding this impossible, as the enemy were in possession of the country all around, he went to Westwood, the home of Dr. Brokenbrough, who was then a surgeon in the army. The enemy approached, and he, to avoid capture, was obliged to leave his brother's remains and escape on foot. Mrs. Brokenbrough sent for an Episcopal clergyman to perform the funeral ceremonies, but the enemy would not permit him to pass. Then, with a few other ladies, a fair haired little girl, her apron filled with white flowers, and a few faithful slaves who stood reverently near, a pious Virginia matron read the solemn and beautiful burial service over the cold, still form of one of the noblest gentlemen and most intrepid officers in the Confederate army. She watched the clods heaped upon the coffin lid, then sinking on her knees, in sight and hearing of the foe, she committed his soul's welfare and the stricken hearts he had left behind him to the mercy of the All Father."

Meaning of Surnames.

Nearly all surnames originally had a meaning. They were descriptive of their owners. In a word, they were nicknames, like "Skinny" or "Shorty" or "Pud."

Peel is a surname that shows the original Peel to have been bald. Grace means fat, from the French "gras." Grant, from "grand," means big.

An Oliphant should be a clumsy and unwieldly person. This surname was "elephant" originally.

The Parkers were keepers of noblemen's parks. The Warners were warreners, or rabbit tenders. The Barkers prepared bark for tanning. The Laboucheres were butchers.

Bell meant handsome. Cameron meant crook nosed. Curtis meant polite. And Forster meant a forester, Napier a servant in charge of the table linen, Palmer a pilgrim, Wainwright a wagon builder, Walter a wall builder, Webster a weaver, Wright a carpenter.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Substitutes For Tobacco.

Sailors on long cruises sometimes exhaust their tobacco. Thence untold misery and many ingenious efforts to create a tobacco substitute. Tea and coffee make the best tobacco substitutes. They smoke freely in pipe or cigarettes, and their taste and aroma are not unpleasant. But they burn the mouth and rack the nerves. Rope yarn—the untwisted parts of rope and oakum—is smoked by sailors as a last resort. Bark, peeled from the hoops of salt beef and pork barrels, is also smoked when the limit is reached. These things smoke abominably, and the black fumes that they give forth from the sailors' mouths are always accompanied by oaths and imprecations. Yet many a desperate sailor has smoked them in the hope of appeasing his tobacco hunger.

St. Maurice.

St. Maurice, in Switzerland, is the name of a little station on the railway that leads up the Rhone valley from the lake of Geneva. The place gets its name as follows: Maurice was the officer second in command of the Thebaic legion, which the Emperor Maximian marched over the Alps in A. D. 302 to quell a rising in Gaul. At Octodurum (Martigny) the legion, every man of which was a Christian, was ordered to sacrifice to the Roman gods for the success of the expedition. Headed by Maurice, they refused, marched off to Agaunum (St. Maurice) and there were twice decimated to enforce submission. But they still refused, and finally the remainder were surrounded and cut down by the rest of the army.

Automatic Cooking Boxes.

Automatic cooking boxes were in general use among the Hebrews nearly 2,000 years ago. The Greek and Roman writers frequently refer to them. In his edition of "Juvenile," for example, Friedlander cites a commentator, who refers to "the Jews who a day before the Sabbath put their viands hot into the cooking boxes, the pots being covered with napkins and wrapped about with hay, so that they may have warm food on the Sabbath."

Always In Evidence.

"I notice," observed Tuffold Knutt, "that people don't pay no taxes on the costliest things they's got."

"How's that?" grunted Ruffon Wratz.

"Well, f'r instance, if you wus wuth over a million you wouldn't have to pay nothin' on that peach of a nose you've got."—Chicago Tribune.

All Against the Preacher.

Sydney Smith loved to tell a good story, and one that haunted his brain and tickled his sides for weeks was that of a tame magpie in a church that suddenly descended on the reading desk and strove to fly off with the sermon and of the desperate struggle that ensued between the bird and the preacher, the congregation all in favor of the bird.

Every ounce of food you eat that fails to digest does a pound of harm. It turns the entire meal into poison. This not only deprives the blood of the necessary tissue-building material, but it poisons it. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure is a perfect digestant. It digests the food regardless of the condition of the stomach. It allows that organ to rest and get strong again. Relieves Belching, Heart Burn, Sour Stomach, Indigestion, Palpitation of the Heart, etc. W. H. Cook, Tilton, N. H., says: "I have taken Kodol Dyspepsia Cure and find it the best remedy for all stomach troubles. It is worth its weight in gold." Sold by H. C. Giesler and G. T. Boyington.

Camel Cavalry.

It is common to think of a camel, the proverbial ship of the desert, as a patient beast of burden. Guided by skillful hands, however, it becomes a very formidable war steed. The Somali warriors have ridden camels in many fierce charges for generations. Mounted on the back of an active camel with a long spear for a weapon, one of these savages is an enemy to be feared.

A Wonderful Pagoda.

The great Buddhist shrine, the Shway Dagon at Rangun, is no temple, but a great pagoda, rising from its platform to a height of 368 feet and all completely covered with gold leaf. This platform, with a perimeter of nearly 1,400 feet, is the place of worship. The pagoda itself has no interior. It is a solid stupa of brick raised over a relic chamber. A cutting made into its center has revealed the fact that the original pagoda had seven casings added to it before it attained its present proportions. The shape of the pagoda is that of an elongated cone. It is divided by Burmese convention into twelve parts: First, the base surrounded by a great number of small pagodas; then the three terraces, called Pichayas; next the Bell; the inverted Thabeik, or begging bowl; the Baungyit or twisted turban; the Kyalan or ornamental lotus flower; the Plantain Bud; the brass plate for the Hti or umbrella; the Hti; the Sein bwin or artificial flowers; the vane, and, last of all, the Seinbu or bud of diamonds.—"The Silken East," by V. C. Scott O'Connor.

Prices For Butterflies.

Butterfly collectors are seldom able to estimate with any confidence the value of their collections, since the prices for specimens so constantly vary. A case in point is that of the blue butterfly of Brazil, specimens of which were originally sold for from $50 to $75. Afterward some collectors who supplied the London market ran into a perfect swarm of these butterflies and shipped to England such quantities that better specimens than the original insects sold for $1 each. It not infrequently happens that two or three specimens of a certain family are discovered by collectors, who, encouraged by the high prices received for their finds, are tempted to prosecute their search for this particular variety without result for several years. Suddenly they or some other collector finds the insects grown plentiful, and the cherished varieties of the cabinet become among the commonest specimens.—Chicago Post.

The Exact Thing Required for Constipation.

Doomed the Colonel.

Emperor William I. of Germany was a strict disciplinarian. One day during the maneuvers of the army a cavalry regiment charged at a strongly intrenched and embatteried village, of which the garden walls were lined with marksmen. "Look, look!" exclaimed the Russian representative. "That regiment is lost." "No," was the emperor's calm reply, "this regiment isn't, but the colonel certainly is." And, sure enough, at the close of the maneuvers he was placed on the retired list.

Two Kinds of Boys.

County Medical Society.

At the eighty-fifth semi-annual meeting of the Medical Society, held in Oswego, last week, those present from this city were Drs. S. A. Russell, A. L. Hall, E. F. Fox and H. P. Marsh. An interesting and instructive paper was read by Dr. E. F. Fox of this city on "Enlargment of Thyroid." Dinner was served at the Hotel Deep Rock. Dr. Dowd of the Library Committee announced that the society's library of 218 volumes was now at the Oswego City Library and that any Oswego city or Oswego County physician is welcome to consult the books. These books are standard medical works and have been gathered by the doctors at their own expense. Their actions in permitting all physicians to refer to them is highly commendable.

Our line of rings—including diamonds, stone set rings, signets and plain gold rings has never been so large as now. Examine them.

CURRENT EVENTS CLUB.

Sessions Resumed—Interesting and Instructive Program Presented.

The first session for this season of the Current Events Club was held on Monday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hunter.

After the election of some new members and the transaction of business of minor importance. Prof. Fairgrieve, the president, gave an excellent summary of important events which had followed each other in rapid succession during the summer months and had now become historical. The meeting was then turned over to the leaders, the Rev. S. D. Robinson and Prof George O. Moore of the High School.

Prof. Moore explained in detail the political evolution in Russia; the abolishment of the regime of the Grand Dukes; the electoral concessions to the Russian people granted by the Czar, and the intricacies which surrounded the representative assemblies; the unrest of the political groups, which had not yet reached a formative period, and the lamentable mental condition of a large majority of those who were now permitted to exercise the franchise.

Mrs. E. R. Redhead's subject was the withdrawal of Norway from the union with Sweden and the circumstances which led to the dismemberment of the kingdom—a union which had existed for ninety years; the ratification of the treaty of Karlstadt, made by the parliaments of Norway and Sweden, and the closing of the session of the Riksdag by King Oscar in person, surrounded by the Swedish princes in their robes and by a brilliant staff of officials in full uniform, all listening with sympathy to the venerable monarch's expressed grief at the separation of Sweden and Norway, but hoped for a lasting peace between the two nations.

Attorney Arvin Rice reviewed, in a succinct manner, the recent elections throughout the country, when good, bad and indifferent leaders were caught in the political maelstrom. This closed a most interesting and instructive program.

The next meeting of the club will be held at the home of Dr. and Mrs. L. Fowler Joy, on Monday evening, Dec. 4. The leaders will be Messrs. John Hunter and W. E Hughes.

Fifteenth Anniversary Held in Baptist Church.

The fifteenth anniversary of the Fulton Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which was held in the Baptist church last Friday evening, was a gathering long to be remembered by the large number of invited guests, who were present.

The church was handsomely decorated with white ribbon and white chrysanthemums The dining room being especially beautiful with its profusion of white ribbon hangings and white potted plants. At five o'clock the guests were invited to partake of a bountiful supper, which was nicely served by young ladies from the Y branch. After supper a most interesting program awaited the guests

Many letters of regret were received from ladies out of-town who had at some time during the fifteen years been members of the organization. Among those read we note the names of Mrs. S. T. Dibble, Mrs. C. S Guile, Mrs. Dr. Rankin, Mrs. C. F. Lee, Mrs. Clarence Wetherby and Mrs. Tenney, State Treasurer. Since its organization the Union has lost thirty-four members by death. As the names were read a loving tribute was paid them by the president, Mrs. W. McCully.

The music by Mrs. N. H. Haviland and the vocal selections by Mrs. Nelson Reynolds and Miss Ruby Cordenier were enjoyed by all.

Mrs. S. M. Barker, the County President, gave a bright address and Mrs. G. M. Gardenier of Oswego who organized the Fulton Union, was present and gave some spicy remarks.

The feature of the evening was the History of the Union, written and read by Mrs. C. W. Streeter. It was intensely interesting and enthusiastically received and will be printed in next week's TIMES.

Fulton—Pulaski Tie.

The High school football team played Pulaski on her own oval on Saturday. The teams were so evenly matched that neither side scored. The game was the cleanest and most exciting witnessed on a County gridiron this season. The local team cannot say too much regarding the magnificent way in which the Pulaskians treated them and they hope in the near future to have a chance to reciprocate. It is a pity that other County teams cannot profit by the example set them by these two teams and conduct themselves and their games in manner befitting gentlemen.

COMMON COUNCIL.

On Monday evening the Board held a special meeting. The bills for the November election were audited.

The claims of Peter Hart, Hazel Hart and George Salisbury against the city, were referred to Attorney Mead.

The council decided to confirm the assessments against the property in South Fourth street on account of the improvement made to that street between Buffalo and Division street, thereby overruling the objections made by F. E VanWagnen to the assessments against his property.

The matter of the fire limits was discussed and resulted in the following boundaries being fixed, North by Seneca street, east by Third street and the west line of Second street from Rochester to the south line of Buffalo street; on the south by Rochester street from Third street to Second street and by the continuation of the south line of Buffalo street from Second street to the Oswego canal; on the west by the Oswego canal. The ordinance provides that no wooden buildings or part wooden buildings shall be constructed within the limits.

Tomorrow evening at a special meeting, the matter of the budget for 1906 will be discussed.

We have just received a splendid line of Bibles, prayer-books, rosaries, etc., which we have temptingly priced.

BARGE CANAL.

Delegation of Fulton Manufacturers Appear Before Advisory Board and Discuss Plans.

A delegation of manufacturers from this city went to Albany yesterday to meet the Barge Canal Advisory Board of Engineers and discuss the plans submitted for the Barge Canal north of the North river bridge. The question of the channel for the canal near Pathfinder Island will also be discussed, the Advisory Board having practically decided to use the channel west of Pathfinder Island. Among those who were present were Messrs. E R. Redhead, George Chauncey, F. B. Dilts, B. W. Bennett, Harry Howe, Thomas Hunter, James Hunter, Charles Allen, Louis W. Emerick, George Mason, George E. True of Fulton and Fred A. Emerick of Oswego.

DIED.

Bernard F. Martin, aged 55, died in Rochester on Nov. 15. The remains were brought to Fulton for interment in St. Mary's.

Ida, aged 22, wife of Mr. Edward Lum, died at her home in West Third street on Sunday. The funeral was held from the late home and the Congational church on Tuesday afternoon, the Rev. G. R. Foster officiating. The husband and three children survive.

The family of Mr. Peter E. Decker desire to express through the Times their gratitude for the many acts of kindness shown them by their neighbors and friends, and by the members of the Masonic fraternity, during their late bereavement in the death of their husband and father. Also for the beautiful floral tributes.

The Lackawanna Railroad desires to include in its Summer Book for 1906 the names of every hotel and boarding house located in territory reached by its line. The insertion of this information is entirely free and those desiring to have the names of their houses so appear should communicate with T. W. Lee, General Passenger Agent, Lackawanna Railroad, 26 Exchange Place, New York City, on or before November 30, giving the name of the house, the name of its proprietor, guest capacity, rates, and if open only for Summer patronage, the dates on which the house will open and close during the season of 1906.

AMUSEMENTS.

Why Girls Leave HOme.

"Why Girls Leave Home" is an important question. At Stephens Opera House on Thursday, Nov. 23, will be presented a drama in domestic life dealing with the question and setting forth from one standpoint at least, the answer. The play is a dramatisation by Fred Summerfield of a story dealing with the friction of domestic environment, characteristic of so many homes, and the effect upon the sensitive nature of the sister and daughter of the household. The scenes are naturally drawn, avoiding melodrama, yet leaving nothing wanting in the pathos incident to all suffering—mental or physical. The presenting company is claimed to be one of the best that is touring the country, and the scenic investiture is very elaborate. Prices, 25, 35 and 50 cents. Seats now on sale at Watson's drug store and Pollard's shoe store.

Claims Filed Against City on Pidgeon Contract.

The following claims have been filed against the city, growing out of the failure of Contractor Frank Pidgeon to complete the west side sewer construction. Mr. Pidgeon's bond guarantees the city against loss from these liens which are for labor and materials.

The city commenced on Monday to finish the work, which is progressing favorably.

Remember to be Charitable.

The annual donation for the Fulton hospital will be held in the vacant store in the Opera house block, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week, Nov. 27, 28, 29. It is hoped and expected that the receipts will be far in excess of previous donations for this most worthy object. Surely we can all afford to give a little, and the aggregate will thus become much if we but do our duty. Do not forget either the date nor the place. Several ladies of the Auxiliary will be present to receive contributions.

A Hunting Trip in the North Woods.

On Wednesday of last week Adelbert Ferguson, James Green and son Ray Green, returned from Harrisville, Lewis Co. where they spent ten days at Hildreth's camp on a hunting expedition.

Mr. Ferguson brought down a fine young buck, while Ray Green brought home a buck weighing 175 lbs., a mother black bear of 200 lbs. and a cub of 75 lbs. The two bears were shot one afternoon, the cub being tie first to be captured.

The mother bear, hearing the cries of her cub, rushed to it. Ray Green had but one cartridge in his gun but he fired and struck a vital spot, so that her bearship was soon dispatched with a hunting knife. It was a close call for the young man.

The trophies of the chase have been on exhibition at Reynolds market this week and friends of the young men will feast on venison and bear meat.

Burma's Natural Magnet.

There is a huge natural magnet in upper Burma, India, covered with great blocks of iron ore, which travelers notice has a tremendous attraction which renders compasses and watches useless. In Spain there is a spring of water said to cure lovesick people. Another queer spring is situated in Mexico the waters of which cure alcoholic cravings, so the legend runs. Hinter mountain, near Fort Davis, Tex., produces an effect which would counteract the good work done by the Mexican spring, with none of the evil effects. People go up this mountain, and they suddenly become conscious of a sort of anaesthetic which takes possession of them and makes them act as if intoxicated. If a traveler reaches the top, he staggers like an old toper, and many have been known to fall in a stupor on the rocks. This mountain has a following which returns season after season to enjoy this harmless dissipation.

What Not to Lend.

Douglas Jerrold, the celebrated wit, said: "There are three things that no man but a fool lends, or, having lent, is not in the most helpless state of mental crassitude if he ever hopes to get back again. These three things are books, money and umbrellas. I believe a certain fiction of the law assumes a remedy against the borrower, but I know of no case in which any man, being sufficiently dastard to gibbet his reputation as plaintiff in such a suit, ever fairly succeeded against the wholesome prejudices of society. Umbrellas may be 'hedged about' by cobweb statutes. I will not swear that it is not so. There may be laws that make such things property, but I am sure that the hissing contempt, the loud mouthed indignation, of all civilized society would sibilate and roar at the bloodless poltroon who should engage law on his side to obtain for him the restitution of a lent umbrella."

The Painter Won.

Often have painters and sculptors discussed the relative merits of painting and sculpture. A story is told of an artist who resented the disparaging comparisons made by a sculptor and laid a wager that he could within a given time paint a picture which should display the human figure as completely as any sculptor could.

The wager was accepted, and upon the appointed day a painting was produced which fulfilled all the conditions. It represented a warrior, his back to the spectator, bending over a sheet of water, in the limpid surface of which were reflected his entire face and form. To the right a suit of polished armor hung and threw back a full length profile image, while a mirror performed a like office for the left side. The sculptor, of course, handed over the money staked.—Paris Journal.

Species of Book Collectors.

In this age of specialization even so simple a subject as book collecting is subdivided in a complex, scientific way.

Book collectors of the twentieth century fall naturally into these classes:

Bibliomane—An indiscriminate, emotional collector.

Bibliognoste—A learned collector, very expert in imprints, first editions and the technicalities.

Bibliograph—A collector who writes about his collections.

Bibliotaphe—A cautious collector who keeps his books always under lock and key in glass cases.

Bibliophile—A real lover of books, one who buys books only for the pleasure of reading them.—Minneapolis Journal.

The Tail of the Comet.

It is one of the most wonderful of all the phenomena that confront us in the study of nature that the tail of the comet, visible through such a vast area of space, is one of the most transparent of objects. The tail of the comet is much more transparent than the earth's atmosphere, as this at its best would in bulk act as an opaque curtain. But stars are seen almost as distinctly through the comet's tail as through the adjacent atmosphere. Comets change their form and appearance with the utmost rapidity and finally back steadily away from the sun, like a courtier out of the royal presence.

Legend of the Tulip.

Centuries ago, by the waters of the Bosporus, the Persian lover sought a flower with scarlet petals and heart of gold. We call it the tulip. To him it was the emblem of love. In Persia, parts of Asia and on the shores of the Mediterranean the tulip grows wild. Today the tulip beds near Haarlem are among the wonders of that quaint Dutch town. Though once the symbol of love, in our modern floral language the tulip stands for inconstancy. She is called flaunting and bold. Hood calls her "a saucy quean."

The Sign.

A famous craniologist strolling through a churchyard found a gravedigger tossing up the earth in which there were two or three skulls. The craniologist took them up and, after considering one a little time, said, "Ah, this is the skull of a philosopher!" "Very likely, your honor," replied the gravedigger. "Sure, I noticed it was somewhat cracked."

Nearsighted.

"I always said Bumpave was nearsighted."

"How's that?"

"Oh, he can't even recognize his own obligations."

Mathematical.

Teacher—Now, Jane, how many is 3 × 1? Jane—Five. Teacher—No; 3 × 1 = 4. Jane—Aw, g'wan! 2 × 2 = 4.

Joy never feasts so high as when the first course is misery.—Simmons.

Board of Canvassers.

The County Board of Canvassers completed its labors last Friday at Oswego and adjourned sine die. The result of its deliberations shows that the vote for the several offices at the recent election was as follows:

Justice of the Supreme Court—Devendorf, 8,877; Piper, 5,525; Leffingwell, 1,481; scattering, 140.

Member of Assembly, First District—Lewis, 4,929; McKay, 3,015.

Member of Assembly, Second District—Whitney, 4,440: Wright, 2,015; Blount, 735.

Special County Judge—Davis, 9,272; Fanning, 5,166.

The count on the constitutional amendments showed that all were carried. The proposition to raise $15,000 for a soldiers' monument was defeated. The votes were:

The November American Boy.

In getting out this specially attractive number to mark the beginning of its seventh year, the publishers of The American Boy are certainly to be congratulated. The artistic, vigorous cover-page picture has "Thanksgiving" written all over it, and the contents of the paper almost marks the limit of what boys enjoy. "The Tripod Fox," a continued story, by Clarence Hawkes, is the top-notch in animal stories; "A Conquering Hero," by the Editor, shows how "pride goeth before a fall;" "The Joy Claim," a continued story, by Will Lisenbee, is a stirring story of the neutral lands in Kansas; "My Four Years at West Point" and "A French Frog and an American Eagle," are each continued two chapters; "Under Nelson's Flag" is a splendid story of the days of the great English admiral, and "The Stuff of Captains," by Will Levington Comfort, is a football story which will be hard to beat. "The Boy From Poplar Cove" tells how a boy with few advantages "made good" in school; "How to Inflate a Football," "The Boyhood of General Grant," being the first of a series of articles on "The Boyhood of Great Americans;" etc., will all be found of unusual interest. There are eighty-five splendid illustrations. Subscription price $1.00 a year. The Sprague Publishing Co., Detroit, Mich.

A Gambler's Superstition.

They were playing a quiet rubber of whist and had called for a new deck of cards. One of the players was an old timer, a card player of years of experience, and he took up the old worn-out cards and put them on the window sill. "Throw them in the fire," said the young man who was his partner. "What!" said the elder. "Throw a pack of cards in the fire? Young man, you don't know what you are talking about. I wouldn't do it for $1,000." "Why not?" "Superstition," was the answer. "Burn a pack of cards and they'll never give you another hand and will mock you to the last. They're bad enough at best, but you never saw a gambler curse the cards or abuse them or burn them or otherwise ill treat them. He doesn't dare to. I know a 'successful' card player who did it. He was dwelling on velvet then. In a year he was a beggar, and he never won a game worth mentioning forever after. It's a whim, but the gentlemen of the cloth of green respect it. They won't burn a pack of cards."

Tonic Effect of Laughter.

We are not disposed to say anything about the physiology of laughter, but we are prepared to affirm that as a tonic there is nothing within the possibilities of human experience that can match a good, hearty laugh. There is something democratic about a laugh that makes it impossible to distinguish whether it is a prince or a plebeian who is moved to merriment. Hardly greater tragedy could be perpetrated than to wrest the power of song from the birds, but that would be a small calamity compared with the filching of laughter from life. If the conditions of this world could be such as to afford to every human being the frequent enjoyment of a pure, hearty peal of laughter, there would be no need that other favors be conferred. This alone would be ample testimony that happiness was paramount in the lives of men.—Baltimore Herald.

"Shoddy."

It is old wool redressed by scientific and clean methods. It is a component of most of the woolen garments of today. The world does not grow enough wool to enable us to have a constant supply of new woolen garments except with the aid of shoddy. It is shoddy that has enabled the workingman to buy a new suit of clothes at the price of a week's wage. In the olden days an old all woolen garment was so expensive that it had to last its owner many years unless he were a wealthy man. It is better hygiene for a man to buy two new shoddy suits a year than to buy an all wool garment which must last him two years. Most of the clothes we wear, in fact, contain an element of shoddy and, so far from being the worse for it, are the better.—Magazine of Commerce.

Tearing Cards.

To tear a pack of cards in two is regarded by some as a marvelous feat of strength, and yet the trick is possible to any one with fairly strong fingers. The secret of the trick lies in the fact that the entire pack is not torn at once, but in pretending to get a grip on the pack the strong man so manipulates the cards that they overlap. In this way but a single card is torn at a time, and once the surface is torn the rest is easy. To any one who can hold a pack of cards firmly the trick is fairly easy, and while in olden times a single pack of cards was considered to be the limit of strength many of our strong men tear three and four packs at a time. The cards are restored to their original form before being given out for examination, and so the trick escapes detection.

A Wonderful Banyan Tree.

The finest botanical gardens in the world are justly claimed by Calcutta, that city of "palaces and pigsties" and statues. The stranger visiting the gardens for the first time will find his wonder and admiration excited by the appearance of an immense banyan tree. The branches of this tree droop as in our weeping willow, and when a branch is sufficiently long its extremity is imbedded in the earth, takes root and in turn sends out more branches. In this instance the operation has been repeated until the tree now measures 959 feet in circumference at its base and has attained a height of eighty-five feet. It forms a veritable maze, a marvel to the occidental eye.

Irving and Hamlet.

"Hamlet" was the first play Sir Henry Irving saw as a boy. Samuel Phelps was in the title role. Some time afterward Phelps was persuaded to listen to a recitation by Irving, and after praising the young man the celebrated actor gave him this characteristic advice: "Young man, have nothing to do with the stage. It is a bad profession."

Considerate.

"Well, Tommy, are you very good to your little sister?" asked the friend of the family.

"Sure," replied Tommy. "I eat all the candy 'cause it makes her sick."—Philadelphia Record.

Mark Twain at Seventy

SAMUEL LANGHORNE CLEMENS, better known as Mark Twain and generally regarded as the dean of American humorists, will be seventy years of age on the 30th of November. He was born in Florida, Mo., in 1835. It is an old belief that there is nothing like laughing to keep a man young, and the friends of Mr. Clemens have sometimes congratulated him on the fact that joke making has not apparently been to him a wearing occupation. It has been suggested that what age he shows has come perhaps from the efforts of the humorist to be serious.

Mr. Clemens never graduated from a college, but Yale has made him a doctor of literature and the University of Missouri has conferred upon him the degree of doctor of laws. The humorist has said that these degrees greatly increased his respect for himself.

Mr. Clemens has been in numerous occupations. He has been printer, pilot on Mississippi river steamers, soldier of the south for three weeks only, private secretary, miner, editor, publisher, humorist and historian. In all except the last two he fell short of brilliant success.

In 1870 at Elmira, N. Y., Mr. Clemens married Miss Olivia L. Langdon. She died not long ago. Some years since the humorist was a guest at a dinner in Buffalo, where he once edited a newspaper, and he told a story of his experiences in connection with his wedding journey. "I notice many changes since I was a citizen of Buffalo," said Mr. Clemens. "I miss the faces of many old friends. They have gone to the tomb, to the gallows, to the White House. Thus far the rest of us have escaped, but be sure our own turn is coming. I remember one circumstance of bygone times with great vividness. I arrived here after dark on a February evening in 1870 with my wife and a large company of friends, when I had been a husband twenty-four hours, and they put us two in a covered sleigh and drove us up and down and every which way, through all the back streets in Buffalo, until at last I got ashamed and said, 'I asked Mr. Slee to get me a cheap boarding house, but I didn't mean that he should stretch economy to the going outside the state to find it.' The fact was there was a practical joke to the fore which I didn't know anything about, and all this fooling around was to give it time to mature. My father-in-law, the late Jervis Langdon, whom many of you will remember, had been clandestinely spending a fair fortune upon a house and furniture in Delaware avenue for us and had kept his secret so well that I was the only person this side of Niagara Falls that hadn't found it out. We reached the house at last about 10 o'clock and were introduced to a Mrs. Johnson, the ostensible landlady. I took a glance around, and my opinion of Mr. Slee's judgment as a provider of cheap boarding houses for men who had to work for their living dropped to zero. I told Mrs. Johnson there had been an unfortunate mistake. Mr. Slee had evidently supposed I had money, whereas I only had talent, and so, by her leave, we would abide with her a week, and then she could keep my trunk and we would hunt another place. Then the battalion of ambushed friends and relatives burst in on us, out of closets and from behind curtains, the property was delivered over to us and the joke revealed, accompanied with much hilarity. Such jokes as these are all too scarce in a person's life. That was a really admirable joke, for that house was so completely equipped in every detail, even to house servants and coachman, that there was nothing to do but just sit down and live in it. Well, the house isn't ours now, but we've got the coachman yet."

A friend wrote the humorist asking his opinion on a certain matter and received no reply. He waited a few days and wrote again. His second letter was also ignored. Then he sent a third note, inclosing a sheet of paper and a two cent stamp.

By return mail he received a postal card, on which was the following: "Paper and stamp received. Please send envelope."

"There are only thirty-five jokes," the humorist once declared. "You may set that down as a first principle. All others are variations. Only thirty-five jokes exist. Perhaps some American will discover the thirty-sixth. But there are more than thirty-five ways of being funny, and sometimes a person is funniest when trying to tell the truth."

Sally's Courtship.

While on a secret mission to Paris in 1583 Rosny had fallen in love with the daughter of the president, St. Mesmin. The young lady was handsome and kind, but while paying her his addresses he heard of a Mlle. de Courtenay, who was reported to be beautiful, well born and wealthy besides. Prudence suggested that he should make her the Baroness de Rosny, but he was already half committed to the other. While he was pondering the subject he arrived one day at an inn in Nogent and found, to his dismay, that by an unlucky chance both ladies were lodged in it, Mlle. de St. Mesmin in the left wing and Mlle. de Courtenay in the right. Both were ready to marry him, and he was ready to marry one of them, but could not decide which. It was a very awkward position for the wavering lover, and at first he thought of saving himself by instant flight. While he hesitated Mlle. de St. Mesmin's younger sister saw him and expressed her surprise that he had been half an hour in the house without visiting them. The decisive moment had evidently come. "Turn to the right," whispered the friend who was with him. He did so, and Anne de Courtenay became his wife.—H. C. Macdowell in Macmillan's Magazine.

A Versatile Parish Clerk.

The ancient parish clerk in England had many functions. Letters were not so common in those days as today, and the clerk was the learned man of the community. One of his functions was writing epitaphs, but this was not the sum of his accomplishments, as may be seen from the advertisement of John Hopkins, clerk of Salisbury in the eighteenth century:

John Hopkins, parish clerk and undertaker, sells epitaphs of all sorts and prices. Shaves neat and plays the bassoon. Teeth drawn, and the Salisbury Journal read gratis every Sunday morning at 8. A school for psalmody every Thursday evening, when my son, born blind, will play on the fiddle. Specimen epitaph on my wife:

My wife ten years not much to my ease,
But now she is dead in caelo quies.

Great variety to be seen within. Your humble servant, JOHN HOPKINS.

He Stopped the Coughing.

One Sunday morning a clergyman was greatly annoyed by the unusual amount of coughing among his congregation. He had not a strong voice and could only be distinctly heard when the people were still and attentive. As the coughing went on, and even grew worse, he suddenly stopped right in the middle of the sermon. All eyes were instantly turned to the pulpit, every cough was hushed and there was perfect silence.

"My friends," said the minister, with a smile, "it seems you stop when I stop."

This gentle rebuke had the desired effect. The people found that their coughing could be kept down when they liked to a great extent, and the minister proceeded with his sermon under far more favorable conditions.

Ether and Matter.

The densest matter is more or less porous. Gold will absorb mercury as a lump of sugar will absorb water, showing there must be interstices or interatomic spaces in it, but the ether shows no such property. If a drop of water could be magnified sufficiently one would ultimately see the different atoms of hydrogen and oxygen that constitute the molecules of water. If a small volume of ether could be thus magnified the indications are that the ultimate part would look like the first, which is the same as saying that it is not made up of discrete particles, but fills space completely. This is expressed by saying that the ether is a continuous medium and is hence incomparable with matter.

An Odd Bird's Nest.

The oddest of all birds' nests is the one built by the tontobane, a South African songster. It is built of cotton and always upon the tree producing the material. In constructing the domicile the female works inside and the male outside, where he builds a sentinel box for his own special use. He sits in the box and keeps watch or sings nearly all the time, and when danger comes in the form of a hawk or a snake he warns the family, but never enters the main nest.

Come Out of Your Shell.

Do you allow yourself to become absentminded, wrapped up in a brown study? Look about you. Speak to those that you have been in the habit of ignoring. Make friends with every one. Strive to touch life everywhere you can. You will accomplish your tasks better by so doing than by going forward blindly absorbed in meditation or engrossed by internal musings.

Then He Got Mad.

Husband (impatiently)—If the fool killer would strike this town he would find plenty of work to do. Wife—Is there such a person, dear? Husband—Of course there is. Wife (with anxiety)—Well, I do hope, John, that you will be very careful.

Returned Thoughts.

"Do thoughts that came to you in the long ago ever return?" asked the originator of silly questions.

"Not unless I inclose stamps," answered the literary party.—Chicago News.

Advantages of Travel.

All travel has its advantage. If the passenger visits better countries he may learn to improve his own, and if fortune carries him to worse he may learn to enjoy his own.—Johnson.

Free will is not the liberty to do whatever one likes, but the power of doing whatever one sees ought to be done, even in the face of otherwise overwhelming impulse. There lies freedom indeed.

THE INDIAN FALSE FACE.

It Is Worn In Ceremonial Dances and Is Often Grotesque.

The masks or false faces that Indians use in ceremonial dances are often grotesque in the extreme. The specimen shown in the accompanying picture is one that was once used by British Columbia Indians, and it has a mouth that opens and shuts and eyes that roll at the will of the wearer, thus adding much to the weird effect the mask gives when worn in the performance of a wild and strange ceremonial. The average American boy would give anything he possessed to have such a mask to wear on Halloween, and, indeed, there is some appropriateness in donning such a disguise on such an occasion, for it is then that spirits are alleged to be abroad perpetrating strange and whimsical acts and terrifying the wicked or superstitious, and these false faces are commonly believed by their Indian owners to be the dwelling places of spirits. Among some tribes they are worn in dances which are intended to drive away the bad spirits.

The British Columbia Indians, who are famous for their totem poles, are quite expert in the making of false faces of exceptionally grotesque aspect. Their strange form of construction is not caused by the Indian's desire to make something which will appear queer or funny to the white man, but is due to his aim to create something carrying out the ideas of the tribe about mythological characters or the animals that are held in special regard or reverence. The masks which the Zunis of Arizona and New Mexico make are as grotesque in their way as those of the British Columbia Indians, though of altogether different appearance. The false face was a popular institution among the Iroquois tribes, and to this day on the reservations in New York and Canada the false face takes a prominent part in certain ceremonials. At the New Year's festival, which the Iroquois observe in February, the false face dance is an important function, and in connection with it ashes are sprinkled on the heads of the sick to drive away the bad spirits supposed to be afflicting them with disease.

MRS. BURKE-ROCHE.

New York Society Leader Who Is Fond of Dogs and Horses.

Mrs. James Burke-Roche, the society leader of New York and Newport, is very fond of dogs and horses, and at the fashionable shows, in which these animals are on view, is usually expected to make a fine display of her pets. Mrs. Burke-Roche was Miss Fannie Work, daughter of the millionaire Frank Work, and in 1880 married the Hon. James Boothby Burke-Roche, reputed at the time the handsomest man in London and scion of a family dating back 300 years.

It was an unhappy union, and a divorce resulted. Mr. Roche recently attained notoriety by smuggling a torpedo boat destroyer out of England and safely delivering it into the hands of the Russians, a feat for which he is said to have received $100,000. This is not the only exploit credited to him. He has fought Indians in North America and headed revolutions in South America. Perhaps he is the only living man to whom is erected a tombstone. This stands in the wilds of Montana and is neatly inscribed, "Sacred to the memory of the Hon. James Roche." It was erected in 1879 by his mother, Lady Fermoy, who was under the belief that her son had been killed during an Indian raid.

An Ivory Mat.

Many people have never even heard of such a thing, and it is not to be wondered at, for these mats are exceedingly rare, and it is said by those who know that only three of these beautiful curiosities exist in the whole world. The one we now write about is the largest one made. It measures 8 by 4 feet and, though made in a small hill state in the north of India, has an almost Greek design for its border. It was only used on state occasions, when the rajah sat on it to sign important documents. The original cost of the mat is fabulous, for 6,400 pounds of ivory were used in its manufacture. The finest strips of ivory must have been taken off the tusks, as the mat is as flexible as a woven stuff and beautifully fine.—London Graphic.

Sea Water and Colds.

The delusion that sea water does not give cold is accountable for much harm. A chill may be caught by wetting from sea water as quickly as by wetting from any other water. There is a certain stimulation to the skin from salt, no doubt, but that does not prevent chills from indiscriminate exposure to wetting by salt water, and, chills are fertile causes of illness. Chill to the lower part of the body is always dangerous to any one. It is much more so to a child than to a grown person, though many people seem to think the reverse is the case.

Sandy's Warning.

A volunteer sham fight took place in England. During the retreat a Scotch volunteer in scrambling through some bushes stuck fast in a hedge. One of the advancing foe, seeing the situation, for a joke, came toward the unfortunate volunteer at full charge, with his bayonet fixed and a ferocious look on his face. The poor fellow in the hedge, seeing the threatening aspect of affairs, bawled out at the top of his voice: "Haud on, you idiot! Dinna you ken it's only in fun?"

Mother Livesey's Well.

In the grounds of Livesey Hall, near Blackburn, there is a spring called "Mother Livesey's well." The curious thing about this well is that the water only flows during nine months of the year and is quite dry during the other three months—June, July and August—however wet the weather may be. The water always commences to flow on the same date each year, and never freezes even during the hardest frost.—Leeds (England) News.

Like a Miracle.

"The age of miracles has gone," declared the cynic.

"No, it hasn't," said the woman. "My husband told me this morning that he noticed I was wearing last season's hat and gave me money to buy a new one."—Baltimore American.

Heredity.

"Oh, hubby, dear, what do you think are the first words our baby will say?" gurgled Mrs. Matron.

"Well, if she takes after you, they will probably be, 'This is a nice time to come home,'" said the brute.—Portland Telegraph.

Very Much Happier.

A boy reading the verse, "And those who live in cottages are happier than those who sit on thrones," startled the crowd by reading thus: "And those who live in cottages are happier than those who sit on thorns."

Human Nature.

"That fellow Spinks has excellent judgment."

"What makes you think so?"

"Why—er—he's always asking my opinion about things."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Alaska's canned salmon output is estimated this year at $10,000,000.

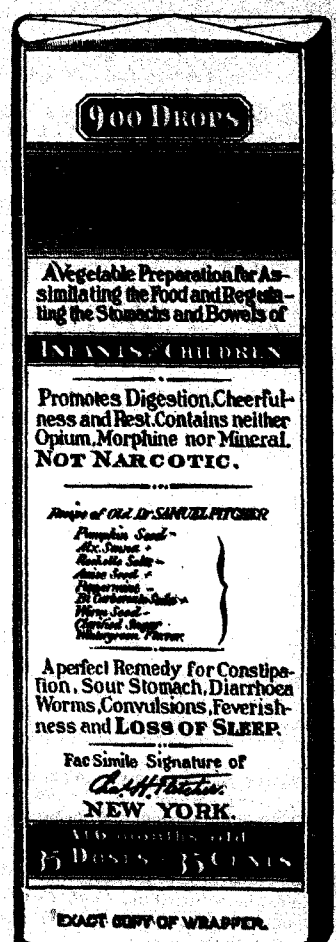
Through Thick and Thin.

If monarchs have often permitted themselves the indulgence of making puns the fact has not been recorded in the pages of history. One pun, however, is assigned to King Frederick William IV. of Prussia.

It is said that on the occasion of a court ball he was standing near the middle of the dance hall in conversation with an exceedingly thin ambassador. In the haste and excitement of a fiery galop a lieutenant of the hussars danced, with his partner, between the monarch and the person whom he was addressing, and then, seeing what he had done, he began to stammer abject apologies and explanations.



"Oh, that was nothing," replied the king, with a hearty laugh. "A hussar must go without fear through thick and thin."

A whimsical glance from his own portly figure to that of the slender ambassador accompanied this answer, and the hussar felt himself not only pardoned, but invited to share in the king's laugh.

Serving Fish.

Fish is dainty food. Practice is needed in serving it. Lightness of touch and dexterity of management are necessary to keep the delicate flakes intact. It requires some skill to rip the skin and lay it back and sever the head and tail with neatness and dispatch. These three articles must never leave the platter. They belong to the cat. The choicest morsel of any white fish is the cheek. It is not good form to cut through a fish. Begin at the tail and throw aside the skin. Begin at the head to serve, cutting to the backbone. When the meat on that side is helped turn the fish and help the other side in the same way. If there is roe a part should be served each person. Boiling is the nicest way to cook and the easiest way to serve fish. Dress the edge of the platter with hard egg and sliced lemon, tomato and beets.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 22, 1905.

PRINCE CHARLES of Denmark has been elected King of Norway and has ascended the throne. Thus terminates one of the most extraordinary movements in European history. The general election in Norway has demonstrated an overpowering preference for a constitutional monarchy as against a Republic. The new King, whose official title is Haakon VII., is related to most of the royal houses of Europe.

THE utter worthlessness of the present law regarding the filing of election expenses by candidates has been demonstrated, even by some of the aspirants to office in our own city. There should be absolutely no secret as to the contributions or the object of expenditure. The necessity for reformation along this line is apparent to every fair-minded man. If candidates were to furnish an exact account of money so expended, as the law requires, it would not be so difficult to reconcile the alleged sworn statements with their consciences. Legislation for the prevention of corrupt practices in this State is certainly needed Mayor McClellan of New York has sworn that he "did not spend a cent for campaign purposes—not even car-fare, cab-fare, nor the price of a newspaper."

BALLOT REFORM A NECESSITY.

A change in the ballot law seems imminent as a new interest has been awakened in the subject by the complex conditions which have existed in New York City during the recent mayoralty contest. Governor Higgins has expressed the opinion that the old law has proved inadequate and should be amended in several particulars, while William M. Ivins, the Republican candidate for mayor of New York in the last campaign, and who was one of the original drafters of the act by which this State adopted the Australian system of voting, believes that the names of candidates should be grouped according to the offices for which they are running, and not according to parties. Symbols, he states, should be abolished. Such changes would permit a citizen to vote for men on their individual merits, irrespective of their party affiliations.

The consensus of opinion appears to be that the present method of voting is unfair, cumbrous and full of pitfalls, in which many of the electors unwittingly disfranchise themselves.

Those who have watched the counting of the ballots in this city will concur in the opinions expressed. Even the courts disagree when they try to unravel the legal technicalities and explain them. It is estimated that so many and various are the pitfalls of the present voting system that they entrap on an average one voter in twenty.

A Story of Alexandre Dumas.

This story is told of Alexandre Dumas: It is well known that he could not refuse a request—at least not often. One day he gave a man a letter to one of his intimate friends, in Brussels. The friend, a wealthy merchant, received him as though he had been Dumas' own brother, introduced him to his circle of acquaintances, placed his stable at the man's disposal and did everything in his power to make life pleasant for Dumas' friend. After the lapse of fourteen days the man suddenly disappeared and with him the best horse in the merchant's stable. Six months later the merchant visited Dumas and thanked him for the kind of people he recommended to his consideration. "Dear friend," he added, "your friend is a shark. He stole the best horse in my stable." Astonished, Dumas raised his hands toward heaven and cried, "What, he stole from you too!"

Mazeppa and the Cossacks.

The word cossack means robber, and the name Cossacks was given by the Turks to a race in manners, appearance and language like the Russians, but who are said not to be really akin to them. The Cossacks of Little Russia and the Don Cossacks are said to be the most unscrupulous robbers in the world. They excel in horsemanship and form a large part of the Russian imperial cavalry. Styled sometimes the spies of the czar, they keep the nihilists in greater check than any other power and number many more than a million men. Mazeppa, a Don Cossack, the subject of Byron's poem, when condemned to be bound upon a wild horse and borne away to his fate, was carried toward the Ukraine, on the borders of Poland, and, being rescued by Cossacks, became their chief.

The Deep Sea Lead.

In order to find a ship's position when approaching the land in a fog soundings are taken with the "deep sea lead." This lead weighs twenty-eight pounds and is attached to a line which is marked off in fathoms by bunting of various colors, pieces of leather and knots. Bored in the base of the lead is a hole about two inches deep, and this is filled with tallow, so that the gravel or shells at the ocean bottom will adhere to it, and the nature of the bed may be thus ascertained. When the lead is thrown overboard the water's depth is noted on the line, and this and the adherence to the tallow when compared with the description given on the chart will give the ship's position with tolerable accuracy.

11-22 CALVERT J. TIBBITTS.

Every Ounce You Eat.

Every ounce of food you eat that fails to digest does a pound of harm. It turns the entire meal into poison. This not only deprives the blood of the necessary tissue-building material, but it poisons it. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure is a perfect digestant. It digests the food regardless of the condition of the stomach. It allows that organ to rest and get strong again. Relieves Belching, Heart Burn, Sour Stomach, Indigestion, Palpitation of the Heart, etc. W. H. Cook, Tilton, N. H., says: "I have taken Kodol Dyspepsia Cure and find it the best remedy for all stomach troubles. It is worth its weight in gold." Sold by H. C. Giesler and G. T. Boyington.

The attention of agents is called to the celebrated Combination Wall and Floor Clothes Dryer. Write for circulars and terms.

Ancient Theatrical Programme.

Theater programmes were known even in ancient times, though they were then of a very peculiar construction. In Greece and Rome they consisted of small tablets, which were handed out to the audience at the entrance. Those occupying the best seats obtained programmes beautifully worked in ivory, while those occupying the cheaper seats were given tablets in bronze.

The bronze tablets were distinguished by a dove worked in the metal, and the term "piccionerio," used in Italy today as designating the lower priced seats in the theaters, dates from this antique custom.

Another Phase.

No person can say with absolute authority just where the line between decision of character and undesirable obstinacy should be drawn, but many persons attempt to do it.

"I like my wife's prompt decisions as to what she'd better do," said the husband of Mrs. Orlando Jones, "and I admire the firmness with which she settles all disputed matters for the children, but the surprising obstinacy which she displays concerning my affairs is a constant surprise to me. It seems so out of character."

Margaret of Austria.

Bearded women have been very numerous. The most noted of the number was the famous Margaret of Austria, appointed by Charles V. to be governor of the Netherlands. She had a long, stiff black beard and, conceiving the idea that it added to the majesty of her appearance, was very careful of it and so combed and trained it as to make it seem much greater than it was.

His Inexperience.

Judge—Have you anything to say, prisoner at the bar, before sentence is passed upon you?

Prisoner—I hope that your honor will take into consideration the youth and inexperience—

Judge (interrupting)—Wha-a-t! You have been convicted seventeen times!

Prisoner—Oh, no, your honor; I was alluding to my counsel.

A Semiobliging Friend.

"I am so glad I have met you, as I have two favors to ask of you."

"What are they?"

"I want you to lend me $10 and not to say a word about it to any one."

"Two favors at once, man! That's too much of a good thing. One of them—yes. I won't breathe a word of this to a living soul."

One of the Fallacies.

Clerk—As I am about to get married, I came to ask if you would not give me an increase of salary. Employer—My dear sir, that is not necessary. You know a young man always saves money by marrying.

Names of Note In the News

SENATOR J. B. FORAKER.

SENATOR JOSEPH BENSON FORAKER of Ohio, who opposes the plan to give the interstate commerce commission power to make railroad rates, says he believes the evils complained of by shippers could best be remedied by an amendment to the present Elkins law making that act more explicit and efficient. He expects to introduce such an amendment in the senate.

Senator Foraker takes no interest in popular sports or athletics, though he is strong and vigorous himself. He got so much "physical culture" as a boy and young man that he has never had a hankering for anything in the nature of fads in that field. Senator Foraker was one of eleven children, and his father was a poor farmer. A log cabin was his birthplace, and he was taught to wash, iron, cook, milk, spin, pick geese and hold the plow before he was ten years old.

He went to a country district school and one day ripped his trousers so badly that it was impossible to wear them. Unfortunately they were the only pair he owned, and just then his father was unable to replace them. His mother found an old coffee sack and asked her son if he would be willing to wear a pair made from them until a better could be had. The lad made a wry face.

"I guess I'll have to," he replied, "but I don't like to. All the boys will laugh at me."

"Never mind that," said his mother encouragingly. "Brave their laughter and it will help to make a man of you."

All the boys did laugh when Joe Foraker appeared at school in his coffee sack unmentionables, but Joe grinned and bore it. In later years his political friends on the stump turned the despised pantaloons to as good an account as Abraham Lincoln's alleged rail splitting served him.

"All the world applauded the great achievements of Russia's workmen in the great work of liberty," said President Samuel Gompers of the American Federation of Labor in a cable message to the Russian premier, Count Witte. And he added: "The cause of liberty and justice should not be smirched by atrocities and crime. If Russia's workers will as sternly use their power to suppress the vicious massacres of human life, they will still further earn and deserve the warmest gratitude."

SAMUEL GOMPERS.

President Gompers has a reputation as a conservative labor leader, but the men whose cause he represents have the utmost confidence in his loyalty to their interests. It was Mr. Gompers who remarked in speaking of the necessity for organization among workingmen, "We realize the force of what John Hancock said in Independence hall—that 'we must hang together or we will hang separately.'"

On a visit to Pittsburg recently President Gompers was welcomed by a delegation which was headed by a brass band. As soon as his figure was sighted the band burst forth into the joyous strains of "Everybody Works but Father." As he stands in a sort of parental relation to the workingmen of the country, he was quick to see the humor of the incident. As a matter of fact, however, Mr. Gompers worked with his hands for twenty-six years, making cigars, and only a short time ago he demonstrated that he was still skillful in rolling the fragrant weed into smokeable form.

One of the incidents of the recent political revolution in Pennsylvania was the election as state treasurer of William H. Berry, mayor of the city of Chester. Mr. Berry was nominated for treasurer by the Democrats and indorsed by the Lincoln Republicans, Prohibitionists and the Independence party. He received a plurality of about 100,000, although last year when Mr. Roosevelt ran for president the state gave the Republican ticket a plurality of nearly half a million. Mr. Berry is not a native of Pennsylvania, but was born in 1852 in Madison county, Ill. As a boy of seventeen he left the little town of his birth, and, with an education which began in the public schools and ended with the night lectures of an engineering school in Buffalo, he started out on his career. Following in the footsteps of his father, an engineer and inventor, he became a mechanical engineer and is today president of the Berry Engineering company of Chester. The treasurer elect is a local preacher in the Methodist church, and there is rarely a Sunday that he does not preach in some small church, often to a congregation of colored people.

WILLIAM H. BERRY.

Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, chief of the government bureau of chemistry, who since defined a scientific agriculturist as "a gentleman in the employ of the government who can make $2 grow on an appropriation bill where only $1 grew before," is soon to test the healthfulness of cold storage food. For the purpose of the investigation he will use practically the same young men employees of the department who were members of the "poison squad" and allowed themselves to be fed borax and other preservatives in foods last year. The new squad will consist of ten or twelve men, who will subsist for the next year or so on a diet of cold storage foods as the guests of the government. Since the results of the experiments on preserved foods were published inquiries have been received by Dr. Wiley from all parts of the country as to the effects of eating cold storage foods.

DR. H. W. WILEY.

Dr. Wiley was once asked why he did not investigate rouge. "Rouge," the reporter said, "may be very harmful, very poisonous, sir. Don't you think that it requires investigation?" Dr. Wiley smiled. "No," he answered. "I can't say I do. If rouge were poisonous, unnumbered women would have died of it long ago. By the way, I'll tell you a queer thing about rouge. It is something that I came upon one day in a pharmacy, and I think it illustrates an odd phase of human nature. A young girl was buying a pot of rouge, and I heard her murmur to the clerk, 'You guarantee that this will not rub off?' 'I do,' the clerk answered. 'This, like all our rouges, is warranted to stand the hardest kiss of investigation that any of your women friends will try on it.'"

Though a landsman, Truman H. Newberry of Detroit, who recently took the oath of office as assistant secretary of the navy, knows a great deal about naval affairs. The story of his career shows that he possesses especial qualifications for his post, which was once held by Mr. Roosevelt and is of much importance, as the assistant secretary is often called on to act as head of the department and give orders involving weighty matters. He is forty years old, a graduate of the Sheffield Scientific school of Yale and the possessor of a large fortune. His father, the late Congressman John S. Newberry, was a partner of the late Senator McMillan and left his son a goodly sum, which has been increased by wise management until it now foots up several millions. Mr. Newberry's brilliant and beautiful wife, a daughter of the late General Alfred C. Barnes of New York, brought him several millions more. He is an enthusiast on the subject of automobiles, yachts, warships and babies. His family is a large one, and the first arrivals came in pairs. He does not need his salary of $4,500 a year very much, but it will help pay for gasoline for the automobiles and Christmas presents for the children. When President Roosevelt was last in Detroit he made a speech in which he said:

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY.

"I cannot say that the story is true, but they do say that during the Spanish war a sailor while scrubbing the decks was asked what yacht that was in the distance.

"'It's the Dawn,' replied the sailor.

"'How do you know?' was the query.

"'I know,' said the sailor, 'because I own her.'"

The Dawn was the name of the yacht which Mr. Newberry tendered the government for service in the war with Spain. Whether the millionaire yachtsman ever scrubbed decks or not, he was subjected to very rigid discipline during his service in the navy in the contest with Spain. He was a member of the Michigan naval militia, made up largely of wealthy young men. When war broke out they volunteered and were assigned to the cruiser Yosemite. All sorts of menial and disagreeable tasks were given these representatives of leading families, but they were game and none took his medicine with better grace than the present assistant secretary of the navy.

F. Hopkinson Smith, the versatile genius who writes novels, builds lighthouses, paints pictures, constructs sea walls, lectures and does globe trotting, is a native of Baltimore and is sixty-seven years old. He usually spends the summer at his villa near Venice and has discovered an ingenious method of ridding himself of the importunities of the Italian beggars who infest all the highways and make the tourist's life a burden to him, says the New York Times.

F. HOPKINSON SMITH.

"There is nothing the lazzaroni fear so much as the evil eye—that is, an eye the least shade off the normal in any respect," said Mr. Smith, "and it was by playing upon this superstition that I finally discovered a way of ridding myself of these pests. I have a small pocket compass, about the size of a monocle, and when their demands become too importunate I simply fit it into my eye and turn and gaze upon them. The effect is instantaneous. When this sinister orb, with its quivering needle, is fixed upon them, they turn and run away as fast as their legs can carry them."

In Far Counties.

When the shower came up the artist, who was walking through New Hampshire on a sketching tour, sought shelter under a tree, where he was soon joined by another wayfarer, a man of middle age, who looked a sort of better class tramp, and indeed was one.

The two entered into conversation, and it came out that the wayfarer was a harness maker by vocation, but a rover by predilection.

"Yes," he said, "I'm a rolling stone. I'm never happy in one place. I'm here today and gone tomorrow. There ain't any fossil about me. I'm on the move all the time. The world is made to see, I say, and I'm bound to see all I can of it."

The artist began to think that he had fallen in with a modern Marco Polo, and by way of leading up to some interesting anecdotes of the antipodes he remarked:

"You must have been quite a traveler."

"Well, that's about so," the man modestly replied. "I reckon I could find my way over New Hampshire with my eyes shut, and I was once two months in Vermont."

Cold That Kills and Cold That Cures.

In England severe cold generally kills a good many people. In certain parts of North America cold still more severe puts new life into them. It requires no argumentation to show that there must be a definite reason for this. The chief reason is that English cold is mostly damp, while in North America it is mostly dry. There is the greatest difference in the world between dry air and damp air. The former is usually air pure and simple, possessing a full quantity of oxygen and often charged highly with ozone. The latter consists of air mixed with the vapor of water. When the former air, fully oxygenated, is breathed it stimulates more powerfully than chamnagne. The latter, less oxygenated and charged with vapor of water, not only does not stimulate, but depresses.—Public Opinion.

Pasta's Wonderful Voice.

Mme. Pasta's voice extended from low A to D in altissimo and was one of the most remarkable illustrations ever furnished of the value of musical culture in overcoming natural blemishes. Her voice was stubborn and unmanageable, but by dint of study and indefatigable perseverance she brought it to a state of perfection that was the admiration of her contemporaries. Her delight was the bravura style of ornament, and where the composer had not been sufficiently liberal in bestowing ornamentation on her part she invented cavatinas of her own and used them with such effect that they were generally regarded as the best part of her singing. She made her first appearance on the stage in 1815, her last in 1850.

The Meaning of Sympathy.

It was a clever Frenchwoman who said: "Those who have suffered much are like those who know many languages. They have learned to understand and to be understood by many. It is an impossibility to fully sympathize with another's experience unless it has been at some time one's own. In trouble or grief we turn instinctively to some one whom we know has been through the same experience. It is the old human longing for companionship that shows itself. The feeling is strong within us that she will feel and know with me. Therein lies the meaning of sympathy."

The Minister's Response.

A well known minister of a kirk in Glasgow was one day passing along the High street when he was accosted by a crowd of street gamins, one of whom said mischievously, but with becoming gravity, "D'ye ken, minister, the de'il is deed?" The minister made no immediate response, but on the whole crew reiterating the cry, "The de'il's deed! The de'il's deed!" he turned and, raising his outstretched hands, as if to pronounce a blessing, reported, "Ach, ye puir leetle faithless bairns!"

England's Curiosity Shops.

Many of the curiosity shops planted in the back streets of most country towns in England are simply kept up by large London firms, who, from a prolonged study of human nature, have discovered that people who are shy of buying old furniture or old silver in Bond street or Piccadilly are ready and eager purchasers of precisely the same objects at a rather higher price when they come upon them in the back streets of a country town.

When the Stove Preached.

"De preacher wuzn't feelin' good last meetin' day, an' he made de stove preach de sermon."

"Made de stove preach?"

"Yes; made it redhot fum top ter bottom an' den tol' he sinners ter take a good look at it an' go ter thinkin'!"—Atlanta Constitution.

The Ungrateful Ones.

"Do you think it pays to be generous?" said the man of doubtful mind.

"Well, that depends," replied the philanthropist. "To tell the truth, it isn't the money I've given away that I regret; it's what I've lent!"—Detroit Free Press.

Marine Graveyard.

First Fish—You need not feel so proud, you "old graveyard!" Second Fish—This is an insult. Why do you call me an "old graveyard?" First Fish—Because you are full of bones.

Her Hope.

Josie—I was taken for twenty-five today, and I am only eighteen. Julia—What will you be taken for when you are twenty-five? Josie—For better or worse, I hope.

J. G. PHELPS STOKES.

Though a Millionaire, He Preaches Equality and Practices It Too.

James Graham Phelps Stokes, who recently made a strong run for president of the New York board of aldermen on the Municipal Ownership ticket, is a character about whom a novel might easily be written. The story of his career reads more like romance than real life. Born to millions, he decided to devote his life to serving the downtrodden masses rather than to increasing his fortune. A favorite in wealthy society and a young bachelor who was regarded as a good catch by beautiful heiresses of the smart set, he chose to wed a poor and rather plain looking girl whom he met in settlement work in New York's east side. a Jewess whose qualities of mind and heart won his respect and admiration and finally his love. Mr. Stokes, in view of his possession of a fortune, might be supposed to be conservative in his economic views and jealous of any infringement on "vested rights," or opposed to movements looking to any radical change in the existing economic system. However, the facts are that he believes in many features of the Socialist scheme and is aiding in a plan for intelligent and careful study in colleges and in the home of Socialist theories. He is willing and ready to have the existing social and economic conditions changed even though this may involve personal loss.

Mr. Stokes is thirty years old, a graduate of Yale university and has studied medicine. He is a son of Anson Phelps Stokes, and his family has long been noted more for the interest its various members take in philanthropy than for its millions, though the latter are many. He has a sister who is a settlement worker and a brother who is a clergyman. One day not long after he had been a resident of the University Settlement he was interviewed by Miss Rose Harriet Pastor, a writer of stories and verse and then a member of the staff of the Jewish Daily News. The young woman had known all the deprivations and hardships of poverty and for a time had worked in a tobacco factory.

The interview was the beginning of a romance which resulted in Mr. Stokes leading the former factory girl to the altar. The marriage, which occurred last summer, was a very simple one, and after a wedding journey in Europe the happy couple took up their residence in a flat in the tenement section, where Mrs. Stokes does her own housework and where she and her husband try to carry out the ideas of social and economic equality in which both believe. Mr. Stokes made many speeches during the New York campaign and ran almost as well as William Randolph Hearst, the Municipal Ownership mayoralty candidate.

A HISTORIC SPOT.

Monument at Deposit, N. Y., That Marks a Significant Event.

Fifty-four years ago a special train rumbled across the state of New York from Piermont-on-Hudson to Dunkirk, Lake Erie. It was the first train over the Erie railroad and bore a party of dignitaries, among whom were President Millard Fillmore and the great Daniel Webster. Sixteen years before that ground had been broken at Deposit, N. Y., for the construction of the road. Where the first spadeful of earth was dug at sunrise on Nov. 7, 1835, a granite monument has been erected. It was dedicated on Nov. 10 with ceremonies which were attended by state officials and other distinguished persons. The completion of the Erie marked an epoch in railroad building.

CONSTIPATION CURED.

A Barrytown, N. Y., Man's Experience with Cal-cura Solvent.

Dr. David Kennedy's NEW Medicine Cured Him Promptly.

Constipation leads to worse. Often it is the cause of appendicitis. Always it leads to dangerous chronic disease. It should not be neglected, nor should it be temporarily relieved with drastic purgatives. Here is a case in point:

Mr. C. S. Osterhondt, of Barrytown, N. Y., was distressed with indigestion, chronic constipation and kidney trouble for four years. He tried many medicines without relief. He heard of Cal-cura Solvent, Dr. Kennedy's new medicine, used it and began to improve rapidly All of his old complaints have disappeared and he owes everything to Cal-cura Solvent. $1.00, all druggists.

Freak Statue.

One of the most interesting freak statues in England is to the memory of Sir R. Holmes. It is to be seen in the church at Yarmouth, Isle of Wight. The funny thing about it is that it was not originally intended to represent that naval celebrity. It was sculptured for and represents Louis XIV. of France and was being conveyed to that country when the vessel containing it and also the sculptor was captured by an English ship commanded by Sir R. Holmes. The body was finished, the head being left for completion on its arrival in France. On learning who it was for, the English commander compelled the sculptor to finish it by chiseling his (Holmes') head on the king's body. Sir R. Holmes was afterward made governor of the Isle of Wight and held this office from 1667 till 1692, and after his death the statue was erected to his memory.

Snow Banners.

In the Sierra Nevada mountains, when conditions are favorable for the display, there occurs a beautiful and startling phenomenon of nature. At times when the wind drives up the mountain sides in a certain direction and with sufficient velocity there stream out upon the air snow banners from a hundred mountain peaks. They are formed by the circling wind acting upon the light snow and are thick and dark at the top of the mountain, like a flagstaff, then they float away broadly for a mile in length in waves of iridescent light. This magnificent display is rarely seen by other eyes than those of savages, but sometimes it has been the good fortune of a naturalist to witness it when among the wild beauties of the mountain fastnesses.

How to Cure Corns and Bunions.

First, soak the corn or bunion in warm water to soften it; then pare it down as closely as possible without drawing blood and apply Chamberlain's Pain Balm twice daily, rubbing vigorously for five minutes at each application. A corn plaster should be worn a few days to protect it from the shoe. As a general liniment for sprains, bruises, lameness and rheumatism, Pain Balm is unequaled. For sale by H. C. Giesler.

Bounty For Scalps.

During the French-Indian war of 1754 the French offered a bounty for British scalps. In the same year a bounty of £100 each was offered by the authorities of the several colonies. In 1755 Massachusetts granted a bounty of £40 for every scalp of a male Indian over twelve years of age and £20 each for the scalps of women and children. In 1764 John Penn, grandson of William Penn and governor of Pennsylvania, offered a bounty of $150 for every "Indian buck" killed and scalped.

Could Not Be Better.

The uniform success of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has won for it a wide reputation and many people throughout the country will agree with Mr. Charles W. Mattison, of Milford, Va., who says: "It works like magic, and is the best preparation I know of. It couldn't be any better." He had a serious attack of dysentery and was advised to try a bottle of this remedy, which he did, with the result that immediate relief was obtained. For sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Air Pressure.

At the level of the sea the pressure of the atmosphere on the piston of an engine is about fifteen pounds to the square inch, but decreases at higher altitudes. As this atmospheric pressure must be overcome by the steam pressure before any work can be done, it is evident that at the diminished air pressure of high altitudes more work can be obtained from a given pressure of steam than at the sea level, or, in other words, an equally effective pressure of steam can be obtained with the expenditure of less fuel. The difference, however, is not great enough to be of any practical importance.

Tribes of Blue Eyed Indians.

Red haired negroes are scarce enough, but an equally curious freak of nature is seen in the Griegos Indians, near the City of Mexico. They are light complexioned, and the majority have blue eyes and light hair. They dress principally in two shades of blue, and their clothing is good and well made and generally ornamented with the bead and silk embroidery of which Indians are so fond. Their houses are better built and furnished than is usual among Indians, and many have pianos and other musical instruments, upon which they play with considerable skill. These Griegos have no commercial or social connections with other tribes, holding aloof from even those who live at the base of the mountain on which the village is situated. They raise their own food, do their own manufacturing, have their own schools, churches and social institutions and seldom or never marry outside their own tribe. There is said to be another tribe of blue eyed, fair haired Indians, who have the appearance of Germans, living in the Sierra Madre mountains in the state of Durango.

Lather For Shaving.

It is commonly assumed that soap is used in shaving for the purpose of softening the hairs. This, however, it seems, is a mistake. It is used, on the contrary, to render them hard, dry, stiff and brittle, in which condition they best yield to the blade. Hair being naturally oily, the razor would either slip over the limp hair without cutting it, or entering about half way bend the hair back and slice it lengthwise, all the while straining it most painfully at the root, and as a razor would thus slice and pull probably a number of hairs at once the pain produced would be intense. Most shaving soap contains a free alkali, either potash or soda, which combines with and so removes the oil of the hair, leaving only the hard fiber, dry and stiff, as may be seen by taking a solution of carbonate of soda and dipping a single hair into it.

Some Seasonable Advice.

It may be a piece of superfluous advice to urge people at this season of the year to lay in a supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is almost sure to be needed before winter is over, and much more prompt and satisfactory results are obtained when taken as soon as a cold is contracted and before it has become settled in the system, which can only be done by keeping the remedy at hand. This remedy is so widely known and so altogether good that no one should hesitate about buying it in preference to any other. It is for sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

The Pillars of Hercules.

The "Pillars of Hercules" was the name anciently given to the mountains of Calpe and Abyla, standing opposite to each other, the one on the European and the other on the African shore of the strait which connects the Mediterranean sea with the Atlantic ocean. The mountains are now called the Rock of Gibraltar and Jebel Zatant. The word Gibraltar, which is at present also applied to the strait, was originally "Jebel Taric," or "Mountain of Taric," Taric being the name of the leader of the first Mohammedan band which crossed at that point over into Spain in the year A. D. 710.

The Wind Sail.

It frequently happens that after discharging a cargo of a particularly malodorous nature it is necessary to let the air reach certain parts of the hold of a vessel not served by the fixed regulation ventilators. To effect this purpose a portable canvas ventilator, called a "wind sail," is employed. It is cylindrical in shape and is kept in position by means of stays. When it is erected the air blows down it, and the hold is soon pure once more.

A Judicious Inquiry.

A well known traveling man who visits the drug trade says he has often heard druggists inquire of customers who asked for a cough medicine, whether it was wanted for a child or for an adult, and if for a child they almost invariably recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The reason for this is that they know there is no danger from it and that it always cures. There is not the least danger in giving it, and for coughs, colds and croup it is unsurpassed. For Sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Violet For Mourning.

It was not by accident that violet was chosen by many nations as the exclusive color for mourning and by us also for half mourning. Painters suffering from hysteria and neurasthenia will be inclined to cover their pictures uniformly with the color most in accordance with their condition of lassitude and exhaustion. Thus originate the violet pictures of Manet and his school, which spring from no actually observable aspect of nature, but from a subjective view due to conditions of the nerves. When the entire surface of walls in salons and art exhibitions of the day appears veiled in uniform half mourning this predilection for violet is simply an expression of the nervous debility of the painter.—Nordau's "Degeneration."

The Famous Mamelukes.

The mamelukes were a body of soldiers who ruled Egypt for several hundred years. Their name is derived from an Arab word which means slave, and they were originally captives from Caucasian countries. In the middle of the thirteenth century they were introduced into Egypt as the sultan's bodyguard, but upon the accession of Turan Shah, whom they hated, they overthrew him and elected one of themselves in his place. For nearly 300 years they held the power thus usurped, and even when compelled to resign it they had much influence in Egypt. In 1811 nearly all the mamelukes were massacred by Mohammed Ali, and those who then escaped to Nubia were destroyed in 1820.

A Thackeray Story.

Mrs. Bayard Taylor tells an interesting story of Thackeray in her memoirs "On Two Continents." The Taylors met Thackeray in London soon after their marriage. Mrs. Taylor writes that she found "confirmed in his person the characteristics which I had guessed at from his works—a warm heart under the mask of scathing satire. On the occasion of a small dinner which he gave us he said to my husband, after the gentlemen had rejoined the ladies in the drawing room: 'By the bye, I must give you a wedding present. What shall it be?' Then going to an etagere he took down a silver inkstand and gave it to his friend, in spite of the evident displeasure of his youngest daughter, usually so amiable, who exclaimed with all the naivete of her fifteen years, 'Oh, not that one, papa!' But papa gave no heed and a few days later sent us the gift with the inscription engraved upon it, 'W. M. Thackeray to Bayard Taylor, Oct. 27, 1857.'"

No false pretense has marked the career of Ely's Cream Balm. No idle promises of rewards for cases it will not cure. Being entirely harmless, it is not responsible like the catarrh snuffs and powders, for minds shattered by cocaine. The great positive virtue of Ely's Cream Balm is that it speedily and completely cures nasal catarrh and hay fever. Back of this statement is the testimony of thousands and a reputation of many years' success. All druggists, 50 cent, or mailed by Ely Bros., 56 Warren street, New York.

"SAVED MY LIFE"

—That's what a prominent druggist said of Scott's Emulsion a short time ago. As a rule we don't use or refer to testimonials in addressing the public, but the above remark and similar expressions are made so often in connection with Scott's Emulsion that they are worthy of occasional note. From infancy to old age Scott's Emulsion offers a reliable means of remedying improper and weak development, restoring lost flesh and vitality, and repairing waste. The action of Scott's Emulsion is no more of a secret than the composition of the Emulsion itself. What it does it does through nourishment—the kind of nourishment that cannot be obtained in ordinary food. No system is too weak or delicate to retain Scott's Emulsion and gather good from it.

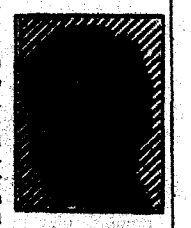
Gossip About Stage People

JULIA MARLOWE.



MUCH interest is taken in Miss Julia Marlowe's work this season in the interpretation of the role of Katharine in "The Taming of the Shrew." The actress herself is far from a vixenish woman, and just because the part is so difficult for a person of her natural sweetness and winsomeness to take she enters into its portrayal with the more enthusiasm.

Miss Marlowe has succeeded very well in keeping a youthful appearance, partly because of her devotion to diversions out of doors. She has a home in the Catskills where ordinarily she spends much of the time between theatrical seasons, and on the tennis court or the golf links, walking or automobiling, she recruits her energies for the stress and strain of her winter's work before the footlights. Although publicity is an essential to her professional success, Miss Marlowe does not like it when off the stage. She once attended a performance in a New York theater where, despite her request for a seat far back among the orchestra chairs, the management assigned her to a box. At the conclusion of the second act an usher handed her a note which read:

My Dear Miss Marlowe—Will you please sit a little farther forward in the box, as I am anxious to get a good look at you? I have seen you many times on the stage, but never before as yourself. Your admirer.

The writer was a woman and presumably of the genus matinee girl.

E. H. Sothern, who is a co-star with Julia Marlowe in Shakespearean drama, was discouraged by his father, the late E. A. Sothern, from entering upon a stage career. His father desired that he should study art and become a painter. But the boy's taste did not run in that direction, and he was ill at ease while attending his art school in London. His first experience on the stage was in 1879. He was then nineteen years of age. His father was playing in a piece called "Sam," and the younger Sothern was assigned the part of a cabman, whose only performance was to enter, bow and say: "Half a crown, your honor. I think you won't object." When it is remembered that the elder Sothern had used every effort to dissuade his boy from acting and had even been stern with him, it may be imagined that the debutant was in no pleasant frame of mind as he entered. Approaching his father, he took off his hat, but was stricken with stage fright and could not open his lips. The father glared at his son.

E. H. SOTHERN.

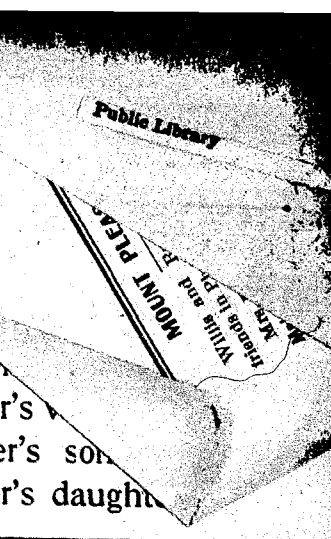
"Well," said the elder Sothern fiercely, "why don't you say something?"

The words were spoken sotto voce, but young Sothern, who by this time was quite incapable of thinking clearly about anything at all, was persuaded that the audience had heard every word his father had said, and he rushed off the stage broken hearted.

Of course this pleased the elder Sothern, who insisted now that Edward would never make an actor. But the boy was plucky and stuck to it. The next night he repeated his line without a break. He spent one year in his father's company and the next year played with John McCullough. He has since played with many of the foremost actors of the time.

Enrico Caruso, the famous tenor of the Metropolitan Opera company, is back in this country after a summer spent in studying French opera and in completing his home in Florence, the Villa Caruso. It is said that Caruso brought back to America with him upward of 1,000 waistcoats rivaling the rainbow in variety of colors and in brilliancy of hues. One in blue worked silk is studded with silver dollars, embroidered, and another in green worked silk is studded with green eyed lizards in silk of changeable colors.

ENRICO CARUSO.



As a boy Signor Caruso was not used to expensive clothing. His mother was a vender of herbs, it is said. He was born at Naples thirty-two years ago and received no musical training until the accidental discovery was made that he possessed a remarkable voice. He appeared first in Italian cities, where he made a name for himself, and then followed triumphs in Paris, London, Russia and South America. He came to the United States for the first time two years ago. Shortly after his debut here Director Courled of the Metropolitan Opera company learned that Signor Caruso had been unfortunate enough to get an attack of tonsilitis.

"Alas, alas!" wept the tenor. "I went to the top of a tall building—oh, a very tall building. Your buildings are so magnifico! The wind, he blow hard, but I went up. I wanted to see high."

"Yes," was the response of the exasperated manager, "you wanted to see high, but I wanted you to high C."

The Conditions Different.

Husband (with newspaper)—When I'm at home you are forever hammering at that piano or else your tongue is running like a trip hammer. It wasn't so before we were married. Wife—No, it wasn't. Before we were married you held my hands so I couldn't play and kept my lips so busy that I couldn't talk.

Sir Andrew Agnew of Lucknow, a well known Scotch baronet, was long pestered by an impudent sort of person, who insisted on being constantly "underfoot." Finally, however, he dropped off, and Sir Andrew was asked how he got rid of him.

"Oh," said he, "I gave him a broad hint."

"A broad hint?" repeated the inquirer. "I thought he was one of those who never could be induced to take one."

"By ma saul," said Sir Andrew, "he was obleeged to tak' it! For as the chiel wadna gang oot at the door I just threw him oot of the window!"

Ancient Theatrical Programme.

Theater programmes were known even in ancient times, though they were then of a very peculiar construction. In Greece and Rome they consisted of small tablets, which were handed out to the audience at the entrance. Those occupying the best seats obtained programmes beautifully worked in ivory, while those occupying the cheaper seats were given tablets in bronze.

The bronze tablets were distinguished by a dove worked in the metal, and the term "piccionerio," used in Italy today as designating the lower priced seats in the theaters, dates from this antique custom.

Another Phase.

No person can say with absolute authority just where the line between decision of character and undesirable obstinacy should be drawn, but many persons attempt to do it.

"I like my wife's prompt decisions as to what she'd better do," said the husband of Mrs. Orlando Jones, "and I admire the firmness with which she settles all disputed matters for the children, but the surprising obstinacy which she displays concerning my affairs is a constant surprise to me. It seems so out of character."

Margaret of Austria.

Bearded women have been very numerous. The most noted of the number was the famous Margaret of Austria, appointed by Charles V. to be governor of the Netherlands. She had a long, stiff black beard and, conceiving the idea that it added to the majesty of her appearance, was very careful of it and so combed and trained it as to make it seem much greater than it was.

His Inexperience.

Judge—Have you anything to say, prisoner at the bar, before sentence is passed upon you?

Prisoner—I hope that your honor will take into consideration the youth and inexperience—

Judge (interrupting)—Wha-a-t! You have been convicted seventeen times!

Prisoner—Oh, no, your honor; I was alluding to my counsel.

A Semiobliging Friend.

"I am so glad I have met you, as I have two favors to ask of you."

"What are they?"

"I want you to lend me $10 and not to say a word about it to any one."

"Two favors at once, man! That's too much of a good thing. One of them—yes. I won't breathe a word of this to a living soul."

One of the Fallacies.

Clerk—As I am about to get married, I came to ask if you would not give me an increase of salary. Employer—My dear sir, that is not necessary. You know a young man always saves money by marrying.

Names of Note In the News

SENATOR J. B. FORAKER.

SENATOR JOSEPH BENSON FORAKER of Ohio, who opposes the plan to give the interstate commerce commission power to make railroad rates, says he believes the evils complained of by shippers could best be remedied by an amendment to the present Elkins law making that act more explicit and efficient. He expects to introduce such an amendment in the senate.

Senator Foraker takes no interest in popular sports or athletics, though he is strong and vigorous himself. He got so much "physical culture" as a boy and young man that he has never had a hankering for anything in the nature of fads in that field. Senator Foraker was one of eleven children, and his father was a poor farmer. A log cabin was his birthplace, and he was taught to wash, iron, cook, milk, spin, pick geese and hold the plow before he was ten years old.

He went to a country district school and one day ripped his trousers so badly that it was impossible to wear them. Unfortunately they were the only pair he owned, and just then his father was unable to replace them. His mother found an old coffee sack and asked her son if he would be willing to wear a pair made from them until a better could be had. The lad made a wry face.

"I guess I'll have to," he replied, "but I don't like to. All the boys will laugh at me."

"Never mind that," said his mother encouragingly. "Brave their laughter and it will help to make a man of you."

All the boys did laugh when Joe Foraker appeared at school in his coffee sack unmentionables, but Joe grinned and bore it. In later years his political friends on the stump turned the despised pantaloons to as good an account as Abraham Lincoln's alleged rail splitting served him.

"All the world applauded the great achievements of Russia's workmen in the great work of liberty," said President Samuel Gompers of the American Federation of Labor in a cable message to the Russian premier, Count Witte. And he added: "The cause of liberty and justice should not be smirched by atrocities and crime. If Russia's workers will as sternly use their power to suppress the vicious massacres of human life, they will still further earn and deserve the warmest gratitude."

SAMUEL GOMPERS.

President Gompers has a reputation as a conservative labor leader, but the men whose cause he represents have the utmost confidence in his loyalty to their interests. It was Mr. Gompers who remarked in speaking of the necessity for organization among workingmen, "We realize the force of what John Hancock said in Independence hall—that "we must hang together or we will hang separately.'"

On a visit to Pittsburg recently President Gompers was welcomed by a delegation which was headed by a brass band. As soon as his figure was sighted the band burst forth into the joyous strains of "Everybody Works but Father." As he stands in a sort of parental relation to the workingmen of the country, he was quick to see the humor of the incident. As a matter of fact, however, Mr. Gompers worked with his hands for twenty-six years, making cigars, and only a short time ago he demonstrated that he was still skillful in rolling the fragrant weed into smokeable form.

One of the incidents of the recent political revolution in Pennsylvania was the election as state treasurer of William H. Berry, mayor of the city of Chester. Mr. Berry was nominated for treasurer by the Democrats and indorsed by the Lincoln Republicans, Prohibitionists and the Independence party. He received a plurality of about 100,000, although last year when Mr. Roosevelt ran for president the state gave the Republican ticket a plurality of nearly half a million. Mr. Berry is not a native of Pennsylvania, but was born in 1852 in Madison county, Ill. As a boy of seventeen he left the little town of his birth, and, with an education which began in the public schools and ended with the night lectures of an engineering school in Buffalo, he started out on his career. Following in the footsteps of his father, an engineer and inventor, he became a mechanical engineer and is today president of the Berry Engineering company of Chester. The treasurer elect is a local preacher in the Methodist church, and there is rarely a Sunday that he does not preach in some small church, often to a congregation of colored people.

WILLIAM H. BERRY.

Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, chief of the government bureau of chemistry, who since defined a scientific agriculturist as "a gentleman in the employ of the government who can make $2 grow on an appropriation bill where only $1 grew before," is soon to test the healthfulness of cold storage food. For the purpose of the investigation he will use practically the same young men employees of the department who were members of the "poison squad" and allowed themselves to be fed borax and other preservatives in foods last year. The new squad will consist of ten or twelve men, who will subsist for the next year or so on a diet of cold storage foods as the guests of the government. Since the results of the experiments on preserved foods were published inquiries have been received by Dr. Wiley from all parts of the country as to the effects of eating cold storage foods.

DR. H. W. WILEY.

Dr. Wiley was once asked why he did not investigate rouge. "Rouge," the reporter said, "may be very harmful, very poisonous, sir. Don't you think that it requires investigation?" Dr. Wiley smiled. "No," he answered. "I can't say I do. If rouge were poisonous, unnumbered women would have died of it long ago. By the way, I'll tell you a queer thing about rouge. It is something that I came upon one day in a pharmacy, and I think it illustrates an odd phase of human nature. A young girl was buying a pot of rouge, and I heard her murmur to the clerk, 'You guarantee that this will not rub off?' 'I do," the clerk answered. "This, like all our rouges, is warranted to stand the hardest kiss of investigation that any of your women friends will try on it.'"

Though a landsman, Truman H. Newberry of Detroit, who recently took the oath of office as assistant secretary of the navy, knows a great deal about naval affairs. The story of his career shows that he possesses especial qualifications for his post, which was once held by Mr. Roosevelt and is of much importance, as the assistant secretary is often called on to act as head of the department and give orders involving weighty matters. He is forty years old, a graduate of the Sheffield Scientific school of Yale and the possessor of a large fortune. His father, the late Congressman John S. Newberry, was a partner of the late Senator McMillan and left his son a goodly sum, which has been increased by wise management until it now foots up several millions. Mr. Newberry's brilliant and beautiful wife, a daughter of the late General Alfred C. Barnes of New York, brought him several millions more. He is an enthusiast on the subject of automobiles, yachts, warships and babies. His family is a large one, and the first arrivals came in pairs. He does not need his salary of $4,500 a year very much, but it will help pay for gasoline for the automobiles and Christmas presents for the children. When President Roosevelt was last in Detroit he made a speech in which he said:

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY.

"I cannot say that the story is true, but they do say that during the Spanish war a sailor while scrubbing the decks was asked what yacht that was in the distance.

"'It's the Dawn,' replied the sailor.

"'How do you know?' was the query.

"'I know,' said the sailor, 'because I own her.'"

The Dawn was the name of the yacht which Mr. Newberry tendered the government for service in the war with Spain. Whether the millionaire yachtsman ever scrubbed decks or not, he was subjected to very rigid discipline during his service in the navy in the contest with Spain. He was a member of the Michigan naval militia, made up largely of wealthy young men. When war broke out they volunteered and were assigned to the cruiser Yosemite. All sorts of menial and disagreeable tasks were given these representatives of leading families, but they were game and none took his medicine with better grace than the present assistant secretary of the navy.

F. Hopkinson Smith, the versatile genius who writes novels, builds lighthouses, paints pictures, constructs sea walls, lectures and does globe trotting, is a native of Baltimore and is sixty-seven years old. He usually spends the summer at his villa near Venice and has discovered an ingenious method of ridding himself of the importunities of the Italian beggars who infest all the highways and make the tourist's life a burden to him, says the New York Times.

F. HOPKINSON SMITH.

"There is nothing the lazzaroni fear so much as the evil eye—that is, an eye the least shade off the normal in any respect," said Mr. Smith, "and it was by playing upon this superstition that I finally discovered a way of ridding myself of these pests. I have a small pocket compass, about the size of a monocle, and when their demands become too importunate I simply fit it into my eye and turn and gaze upon them. The effect is instantaneous. When this sinister orb, with its quivering needle, is fixed upon them, they turn and run away as fast as their legs can carry them."

In Far Counties.

When the shower came up the artist, who was walking through New Hampshire on a sketching tour, sought shelter under a tree, where he was soon joined by another wayfarer, a man of middle age, who looked a sort of better class tramp, and indeed was one.

The two entered into conversation, and it came out that the wayfarer was a harness maker by vocation, but a rover by predilection.

"Yes," he said, "I'm a rolling stone. I'm never happy in one place. I'm here today and gone tomorrow. There ain't any fossil about me. I'm on the move all the time. The world is made to see, I say, and I'm bound to see all I can of it."

The artist began to think that he had fallen in with a modern Marco Polo, and by way of leading up to some interesting anecdotes of the antipodes he remarked:

"You must have been quite a traveler."

"Well, that's about so," the man modestly replied. "I reckon I could find my way over New Hampshire with my eyes shut, and I was once two months in Vermont."

Cold That Kills and Cold That Cures.

In England severe cold generally kills a good many people. In certain parts of North America cold still more severe puts new life into them. It requires no argumentation to show that there must be a definite reason for this. The chief reason is that English cold is mostly damp, while in North America it is mostly dry. There is the greatest difference in the world between dry air and damp air. The former is usually air pure and simple, possessing a full quantity of oxygen and often charged highly with ozone. The latter consists of air mixed with the vapor of water. When the former air, fully oxygenated, is breathed it stimulates more powerfully than champagne. The latter, less oxygenated and charged with vapor of water, not only does not stimulate, but depresses.—Public Opinion.

Pasta's Wonderful Voice.

Mme. Pasta's voice extended from low A to D in altissimo and was one of the most remarkable illustrations ever furnished of the value of musical culture in overcoming natural blemishes. Her voice was stubborn and unmanageable, but by dint of study and indefatigable perseverance she brought it to a state of perfection that was the admiration of her contemporaries. Her delight was the bravura style of ornament, and where the composer had not been sufficiently liberal in bestowing ornamentation on her part she invented cavatinas of her own and used them with such effect that they were generally regarded as the best part of her singing. She made her first appearance on the stage in 1815, her last in 1850.

The Meaning of Sympathy.

It was a clever Frenchwoman who said: "Those who have suffered much are like those who know many languages. They have learned to understand and to be understood by many. It is an impossibility to fully sympathize with another's experience unless it has been at some time one's own. In trouble or grief we turn instinctively to some one whom we know has been through the same experience. It is the old human longing for companionship that shows itself. The feeling is strong within us that she will feel and know with me. Therein lies the meaning of sympathy."

The Minister's Response.

A well known minister of a kirk in Glasgow was one day passing along the High street when he was accosted by a crowd of street gamins, one of whom said mischievously, but with becoming gravity, "D'ye ken, minister, the de'il is deed?" The minister made no immediate response, but on the whole crew reiterating the cry, "The de'il's deed! The de'il's deed!" he turned and, raising his outstretched hands, as if to pronounce a blessing, reported, "Ach, ye puir leetle faithless bairns!"

England's Curiosity Shops.

Many of the curiosity shops planted in the back streets of most country towns in England are simply kept up by large London firms, who, from a prolonged study of human nature, have discovered that people who are shy of buying old furniture or old silver in Bond street or Piccadilly are ready and eager purchasers of precisely the same objects at a rather higher price when they come upon them in the back streets of a country town.

When the Stove Preached.

"De preacher wuzn't feelin' good last meetin' day, an' he made de stove preach de sermon."

"Made de stove preach?"

"Yes; made it redhot fum top ter bottom an' den tol' he sinners ter take a good look at it an' go ter thinkin'!"—Atlanta Constitution.

The Ungrateful Ones.

"Do you think it pays to be generous?" said the man of doubtful mind.

"Well, that depends," replied the philanthropist. "To tell the truth, it isn't the money I've given away that I regret; it's what I've lent!"—Detroit Free Press.

Marine Graveyard.

First Fish—You need not feel so proud, you "old graveyard!" Second Fish—This is an insult. Why do you call me an "old graveyard?" First Fish—Because you are full of bones.

Her Hope.

Josie—I was taken for twenty-five today, and I am only eighteen. Julia—What will you be taken for when you are twenty-five? Josie—For better or worse, I hope.

J. G. PHELPS STOKES.

Though a Millionaire, He Preaches Equality and Practices It Too.

James Graham Phelps Stokes, who recently made a strong run for president of the New York board of aldermen on the Municipal Ownership ticket, is a character about whom a novel might easily be written. The story of his career reads more like romance than real life. Born to millions, he decided to devote his life to serving the downtrodden masses rather than to increasing his fortune. A favorite in wealthy society and a young bachelor who was regarded as a good catch by beautiful heiresses of the smart set, he chose to wed a poor and rather plain looking girl whom he met in settlement work in New York's east side, a Jewess whose qualities of mind and heart won his respect and admiration and finally his love. Mr. Stokes, in view of his possession of a fortune, might be supposed to be conservative in his economic views and jealous of any infringement on "vested rights," or opposed to movements looking to any radical change in the existing economic system. However, the facts are that he believes in many features of the Socialist scheme and is aiding in a plan for intelligent and careful study in colleges and in the home of Socialist theories. He is willing and ready to have the existing social and economic conditions changed even though this may involve personal loss.

Mr. Stokes is thirty years old, a graduate of Yale university and has studied medicine. He is a son of Anson Phelps Stokes, and his family has long been noted more for the interest its various members take in philanthropy than for its millions, though the latter are many. He has a sister who is a settlement worker and a brother who is a clergyman. One day not long after he had been a resident of the University Settlement he was interviewed by Miss Rose Harriet Pastor, a writer of stories and verse and then a member of the staff of the Jewish Daily News. The young woman had known all the deprivations and hardships of poverty and for a time had worked in a tobacco factory.

The interview was the beginning of a romance which resulted in Mr. Stokes leading the former factory girl to the altar. The marriage, which occurred last summer, was a very simple one, and after a wedding journey in Europe the happy couple took up their residence in a flat in the tenement section, where Mrs. Stokes does her own housework and where she and her husband try to carry out the ideas of social and economic equality in which both believe. Mr. Stokes made many speeches during the New York campaign and ran almost as well as William Randolph Hearst, the Municipal Ownership mayoralty candidate.

A HISTORIC SPOT.

Monument at Deposit, N. Y., That Marks a Significant Event.

Fifty-four years ago a special train rumbled across the state of New York from Piermont-on-Hudson to Dunkirk, Lake Erie. It was the first train over the Erie railroad and bore a party of dignitaries, among whom were President Millard Fillmore and the great Daniel Webster. Sixteen years before that ground had been broken at Deposit, N. Y., for the construction of the road. Where the first spadeful of earth was dug at sunrise on Nov. 7, 1835, a granite monument has been erected. It was dedicated on Nov. 10 with ceremonies which were attended by state officials and other distinguished persons. The completion of the Erie marked an epoch in railroad building.

CONSTIPATION CURED.

A Barrytown, N. Y., Man's Experience with Cal-cura Solvent.

Dr. David Kennedy's NEW Medicine Cured Him Promptly.

Constipation leads to worse. Often it is the cause of appendicitis. Always it leads to dangerous chronic disease. It should not be neglected, nor should it be temporarily relieved with drastic purgatives. Here is a case in point:

Mr. C. S. Osterboudt, of Barrytown, N. Y., was distressed with indigestion, chronic constipation and kidney trouble for four years. He tried many medicines without relief. He heard of Cal-cura Solvent, Dr. Kennedy's new medicine, used it and began to improve rapidly All of his old complaints have disappeared and he owes everything to Cal-cura Solvent. $1.00; all druggists.

Freak Statue.

One of the most interesting freak statues in England is to the memory of Sir R. Holmes. It is to be seen in the church at Yarmouth, Isle of Wight. The funny thing about it is that it was not originally intended to represent that naval celebrity. It was sculptured for and represents Louis XIV. of France and was being conveyed to that country when the vessel containing it and also the sculptor was captured by an English ship commanded by Sir R. Holmes. The body was finished, the head being left for completion on its arrival in France. On learning who it was for, the English commander compelled the sculptor to finish it by chiseling his (Holmes') head on the king's body. Sir R. Holmes was afterward made governor of the Isle of Wight and held this office from 1667 till 1692, and after his death the statue was erected to his memory.

Snow Banners.

In the Sierra Nevada mountains, when conditions are favorable for the display, there occurs a beautiful and startling phenomenon of nature. At times when the wind drives up the mountain sides in a certain direction and with sufficient velocity there stream out upon the air snow banners from a hundred mountain peaks. They are formed by the circling wind acting upon the light snow and are thick and dark at the top of the mountain, like a flagstaff, then they float away broadly for a mile in length in waves of iridescent light. This magnificent display is rarely seen by other eyes than those of savages, but sometimes it has been the good fortune of a naturalist to witness it when among the wild beauties of the mountain fastnesses.

How to Cure Corns and Bunions.

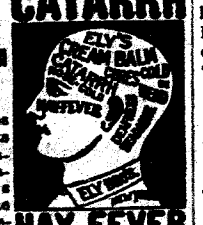
First, soak the corn or bunion in warm water to soften it; then pare it down as closely as possible without drawing blood and apply Chamberlain's Pain Blam twice daily, rubbing vigorously for five minutes at each application. A corn plaster should be worn a few days to protect it from the shoe. As a general liniment for sprains, bruises, lameness and rheumatism, Pain Balm is unequaled. For sale by H. C. Giesler.

Bounty For Scalps.

During the French-Indian war of 1754 the French offered a bounty for British scalps. In the same year a bounty of £100 each was offered by the authorities of the several colonies. In 1755 Massachusetts granted a bounty of £40 for every scalp of a male Indian over twelve years of age and £20 each for the scalps of women and children. In 1764 John Penn, grandson of William Penn and governor of Pennsylvania, offered a bounty of $150 for every "Indian buck" killed and scalped.

Could Not Be Better.

The uniform success of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has won for it a wide reputation and many people throughout the country will agree with Mr. Charles W. Mattison, of Milford, Va., who says: "It works like magic, and is the best preparation I know of. It couldn't be any better." He had a serious attack of dysentery and was advised to try a bottle of this remedy, which he did, with the result that immediate relief was obtained. For sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.



Air Pressure.

At the level of the sea the pressure of the atmosphere on the piston of an engine is about fifteen pounds to the square inch, but decreases at higher altitudes. As this atmospheric pressure must be overcome by the steam pressure before any work can be done, it is evident that at the diminished air pressure of high altitudes more work can be obtained from a given pressure of steam than at the sea level, or, in other words, an equally effective pressure of steam can be obtained with the expenditure of less fuel. The difference, however, is not great enough to be of any practical importance.

HAY FEVER

Tribes of Blue Eyed Indians.

Red haired negroes are scarce enough, but an equally curious freak of nature is seen in the Griegos Indians, near the City of Mexico. They are light complexioned, and the majority have blue eyes and light hair. They dress principally in two shades of blue, and their clothing is good and well made and generally ornamented with the bead and silk embroidery of which Indians are so fond. Their houses are better built and furnished than is usual among Indians, and many have pianos and other musical instruments, upon which they play with considerable skill. These Griegos have no commercial or social connections with other tribes, holding aloof from even those who live at the base of the mountain on which the village is situated. They raise their own food, do their own manufacturing, have their own schools, churches and social institutions and seldom or never marry outside their own tribe. There is said to be another tribe of blue eyed, fair haired Indians, who have the appearance of Germans, living in the Sierra Madre mountains in the state of Durango.

Lather For Shaving.

It is commonly assumed that soap is used in shaving for the purpose of softening the hairs. This, however, it seems, is a mistake. It is used, on the contrary, to render them hard, dry, stiff and brittle, in which condition they best yield to the blade. Hair being naturally oily, the razor would either slip over the limp hair without cutting it, or entering about half way bend the hair back and slice it lengthwise, all the while straining it most painfully at the root, and as a razor would thus slice and pull probably a number of hairs at once the pain produced would be intense. Most shaving soap contains a free alkali, either potash or soda, which combines with and so removes the oil of the hair, leaving only the hard fiber, dry and stiff, as may be seen by taking a solution of carbonate of soda and dipping a single hair into it.

Some Seasonable Advice.

It may be a piece of superfluous advice to urge people at this season of the year to lay in a supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is almost sure to be needed before winter is over, and much more prompt and satisfactory results are obtained when taken as soon as a cold is contracted and before it has become settled in the system, which can only be done by keeping the remedy at hand. This remedy is so widely known and so altogether good that no one should hesitate about buying it in preference to any other. It is for sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

The Pillars of Hercules.

The "Pillars of Hercules" was the name anciently given to the mountains of Calpe and Abyla, standing opposite to each other, the one on the European and the other on the African shore of the strait which connects the Mediterranean sea with the Atlantic ocean. The mountains are now called the Rock of Gibraltar and Jebel Zatant. The word Gibraltar, which is at present also applied to the strait, was originally "Jebel Taric," or "Mountain of Taric," Taric being the name of the leader of the first Mohammedan band which crossed at that point over into Spain in the year A. D. 710.

The Wind Sail.

It frequently happens that after discharging a cargo of a particularly malodorous nature it is necessary to let the air reach certain parts of the hold of a vessel not served by the fixed regulation ventilators. To effect this purpose a portable canvas ventilator, called a "wind sail," is employed. It is cylindrical in shape and is kept in position by means of stays. When it is erected the air blows down it, and the hold is soon pure once more.

A Judicious Inquiry.

A well known traveling man who visits the drug trade says he has often heard druggists inquire of customers who asked for a cough medicine, whether it was wanted for a child or for an adult, and if for a child they almost invariably recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The reason for this is that they know there is no danger from it and that it always cures. There is not the least danger in giving it, and for coughs, colds and croup it is unsurpassed. For Sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Violet For Mourning.

It was not by accident that violet was chosen by many nations as the exclusive color for mourning and by us also for half mourning. Painters suffering from hysteria and neurasthenia will be inclined to cover their pictures uniformly with the color most in accordance with their condition of lassitude and exhaustion. Thus originate the violet pictures of Manet and his school, which spring from no actually observable aspect of nature, but from a subjective view due to conditions of the nerves. When the entire surface of walls in salons and art exhibitions of the day appears veiled in uniform half mourning this predilection for violet is simply an expression of the nervous debility of the painter.—Nordau's "Degeneration."

Rid yourself of nervous debility with this remedy, and you are not likely to take cold. Don't give up, no matter how long you have been feeble, despondent and wretched. The Famous Mamelukes.

The mamelukes were a body of soldiers who ruled Egypt for several hundred years. Their name is derived from an Arab word which means slave, and they were originally captives from Caucasian countries. In the middle of the thirteenth century they were introduced into Egypt as the sultan's bodyguard, but upon the accession of Turan Shah, whom they hated, they overthrew him and elected one of themselves in his place. For nearly 300 years they held the power thus usurped, and even when compelled to resign it they had much influence in Egypt. In 1811 nearly all the mamelukes were massacred by Mohammed Ali, and those who then escaped to Nubia were destroyed in 1820.

A Thackeray Story.

Mrs. Bayard Taylor tells an interesting story of Thackeray in her memoirs "On Two Continents." The Taylors met Thackeray in London soon after their marriage. Mrs. Taylor writes that she found "confirmed in his person the characteristics which I had guessed at from his works—a warm heart under the mask of scathing satire. On the occasion of a small dinner which he gave us he said to my husband, after the gentlemen had rejoined the ladies in the drawing room: 'By the bye, I must give you a wedding present. What shall it be?' Then going to an etagere he took down a silver inkstand and gave it to his friend, in spite of the evident displeasure of his youngest daughter, usually so amiable, who exclaimed with all the naivete of her fifteen years, 'Oh, not that one, papa!' But papa gave no heed and a few days later sent us the gift with the inscription engraved upon it, 'W. M. Thackeray to Bayard Taylor, Oct. 27, 1857.'"

No false pretense has marked the career of Ely's Cream Balm. No idle promises of rewards for cases it will not cure. Being entirely harmless, it is not responsible like the catarrh snuffs and powders, for minds shattered by cocaine. The great positive virtue of Ely's Cream Balm is that it speedily and completely cures nasal catarrh and hay fever. Back of this statement is the testimony of thousands and a reputation of many years' success. All druggists, 50 cent, or mailed by Ely Bros., 56 Warren street, New York.

"SAVED MY LIFE"

—That's what a prominent druggist said of Scott's Emulsion a short time ago. As a rule we don't use or refer to testimonials in addressing the public, but the above remark and similar expressions are made so often in connection with Scott's Emulsion that they are worthy of occasional note. From infancy to old age Scott's Emulsion offers a reliable means of remedying improper and weak development, restoring lost flesh and vitality, and repairing waste. The action of Scott's Emulsion is no more of a secret than the composition of the Emulsion itself. What it does it does through nourishment—the kind of nourishment that cannot be obtained in ordinary food. No system is too weak or delicate to retain Scott's Emulsion and gather good from it.

We will send you a sample free.

Gossip About Stage People

JULIA MARLOWE.

MUCH interest is taken in Miss Julia Marlowe's work this season in the interpretation of the role of Katharine in "The Taming of the Shrew." The actress herself is far from a vixenish woman, and just because the part is so difficult for a person of her natural sweetness and winsomeness to take she enters into its portrayal with the more enthusiasm.

Miss Marlowe has succeeded very well in keeping a youthful appearance, partly because of her devotion to diversions out of doors. She has a home in the Catskills where ordinarily she spends much of the time between theatrical seasons, and on the tennis court or the golf links, walking or automobiling, she recruits her energies for the stress and strain of her winter's work before the footlights. Although publicity is an essential to her professional success, Miss Marlowe does not like it when off the stage. She once attended a performance in a New York theater where, despite her request for a seat far back among the orchestra chairs, the management assigned her to a box. At the conclusion of the second act an usher handed her a note which read:

My Dear Miss Marlowe—Will you please sit a little farther forward in the box, as I am anxious to get a good look at you? I have seen you many times on the stage, but never before as yourself. Your admirer.

The writer was a woman and presumably of the genus matinee girl.

E. H. Sothern, who is a co-star with Julia Marlowe in Shakespearean drama, was discouraged by his father, the late E. A. Sothern, from entering upon a stage career. His father desired that he should study art and become a painter. But the boy's taste did not run in that direction, and he was ill at ease while attending his art school in London. His first experience on the stage was in 1879. He was then nineteen years of age. His father was playing in a piece called "Sam," and the younger Sothern was assigned the part of a cabman, whose only performance was to enter, bow and say: "Half a crown, your honor. I think you won't object." When it is remembered that the elder Sothern had used every effort to dissuade his boy from acting and had even been stern with him, it may be imagined that the debutant was in no pleasant frame of mind as he entered. Approaching his father, he took off his hat, but was stricken with stage fright and could not open his lips. The father glared at his son.

E. H. SOTHERN.

"Well," said the elder Sothern fiercely, "why don't you say something?"

The words were spoken sotto voce, but young Sothern, who by this time was quite incapable of thinking clearly about anything at all, was persuaded that the audience had heard every word his father had said, and he rushed off the stage broken hearted.

Of course this pleased the elder Sothern, who insisted now that Edward would never make an actor. But the boy was plucky and stuck to it. The next night he repeated his line without a break. He spent one year in his father's company and the next year played with John McCullough. He has since played with many of the foremost actors of the time.

Enrico Caruso, the famous tenor of the Metropolitan Opera company, is back in this country after a summer spent in studying French opera and in completing his home in Florence, the Villa Caruso. It is said that Caruso brought back to America with him upward of 1,000 waistcoats rivaling the rainbow in variety of colors and in brilliancy of hues. One in blue worked silk is studded with silver dollars, embroidered, and another in green worked silk is studded with green eyed lizards in silk of changeable colors.

ENRICO CARUSO.

As a boy Signor Caruso was not used to expensive clothing. His mother was a vender of herbs, it is said. He was born at Naples thirty-two years ago and received no musical training until the accidental discovery was made that he possessed a remarkable voice. He appeared first in Italian cities, where he made a name for himself, and then followed triumphs in Paris, London, Russia and South America. He came to the United States for the first time two years ago. Shortly after his debut here Director Conried of the Metropolitan Opera company learned that Signor Caruso had been unfortunate enough to get an attack of tonsilitis.

"Alas, alas!" wept the tenor. "I went to the top of a tall building—oh, a very tall building. Your buildings are so magnifico! The wind, he blow hard, but I went up. I wanted to see high."

"Yes," was the response of the exasperated manager, "you wanted to see high, but I wanted you to high C."

Getting Real Lemon Oil.

A dealer in spices in New York held up a small bottle filled with a pale amber liquid. "Smell it," he said, drawing the cork. The visitor inhaled an odor which seemed to call up visions of orange and citron groves of ancient Greek fame.

"It's the genuine oil of lemons," said the dealer in response to a look of inquiry. "That is all I have left of a pound of the oil, and it took 1,200 lemons to produce it. Rather expensive stuff, almost equal to that of attar of roses. The method of obtaining the oil is tedious. A man has a big, dry, clean sponge before him on a table. He takes strips of the lemon peel, gives them a certain twist which breaks the cells and sends the oil out in a fine spray on the sponge. He has to work quickly to avoid evaporation.

"When the sponge has taken up the sprays of about a hundred rinds it is wet enough to be squeezed out. An ounce or so of clear and fragrant oil then flows from it."

Irving's First Success.

In 1874 Henry Irving achieved an immense success by his performance of "Hamlet" at the London Lyceum theater. His interpretation of the part was so striking and unusual that the play had a run unprecedented at that time, continuing for 200 nights. Of his experience in playing this part Sir Henry gave, some years before his death, an interesting account.

"I can always tell," he said, "when the audience is with me. It was not with me on the first night of 'Hamlet,' which is perhaps curious, considering my subsequent success. On the first night I felt that the audience did not go with me until the first meeting with Ophelia, when they clianged toward me entirely. But as night succeeded night my Hamlet grew in their estimation. I could feel it all the time, and now I know that they like it—that they are with me heart and soul."—Harper's.

How an Orang Outang Travels.

It is a most interesting sight to watch an orang outang make its way through the jungle. It walks slowly along the larger branches in a semi-erect attitude, this being apparently caused by the length of its arms and the shortness of its legs. It invariably selects those branches which intermingle with those of a neighboring tree, on approaching which it stretches out its long arms and, grasping the boughs opposite, seems first to shake them as if to test their strength and then deliberately swings itself across to the next branch, which it walks along, as before. It does not jump or spring, as monkeys usually do, and never appears to hurry itself unless some real danger presents. Yet, in spite of its apparently slow movements, it gets along far quicker than a person running through the forest beneath.—Popular Magazine.

Sickened of the Scalpel.

An extraordinary event led Lassone, physician to Louis XVI. of France, to abandon his anatomical studies. While selecting from among some dead bodies a suitable subject for dissection he imagined that one of them showed doubtful signs of death and sought to revive a life which was perhaps not extinguished. His efforts were crowned with success. He cured the man, and as he was poor nourished and supported him, but the idea of having been on the point of committing a crime so affected Lassone that he felt himself unable to pursue his accustomed labors, and from that time forward the study of natural history and chemistry took the place of that of anatomy.

Feast of Kisses.

Halmagen, in Roumania, possesses a public festival which is probably unique in the world. It is a little town of about 1,200 inhabitants, and on the morning of its annual fair day the population from about eighty villages come trooping in in swarms. To them go out all the young women, married or single, of Halmagen, each bearing a small flower garland and vessel of wine, and all attended by their godmothers. This last precaution is taken from motives of deference for Mrs. Grundy. As the visitors approach, the young women offer to each a taste of wine and—a kiss.

Spelling In the Year 1408.

By the following, which is an exact copy of the first paragraph in the will of Henry IV. of England, written in January, 1408, it will be seen that even kings are not always good spellers:

"In the name of God, Fadir, Son and Holly Gost, three Persons and one God, I, Henery, sinful wrech by the Grace of God Kyng of England and Fraunce, and Lord of Irland, being in my hole mynd, mak my testament in manere and forme that suyth, Fyrst, I bequethe to Almighty God my sinful soul, the whyche had nevere been worthy of the man, but thro' hys mercies and hys grase, which lyffe I haveth myspendyed thereof I put myselfe wholly in his grase and mercye with all myn herte. Also, I thanke my lordis threw the peple for the trew servyse that they have dune unto me, and I ask them forgyvnis if I hasth mysentreted them in eny wyse."

It will also be noted that Henry, besides not being up to the standard as a speller, had a peculiar habit of spelling one word in from two to five different ways.

Artists as Frame Makers.

The frame for the picture is always a sore question with the average artist, as any one of them will confess and any frame maker testify to. Most painters have definite ideas on how their canvases should be framed, but when it comes to ordering and paying for them, that is another matter. As great an artist as Alma-Tadema always designed his own frames, and not a few New York painters design and make their own. There is one Boston artist who began by making his own frames after his own designs, and his effects were so artistic that several of his colleagues in that city begged him to make frames for them. He consented to do this in a few cases, until the fame of his work spread abroad, and as a result he received so many orders that he set up a frame making shop of his own.

The Stone of Destiny.

The historic stone known in Scotland as the "Stone of Destiny," in Ireland as the "Lia Fail" and in England as "Jacob's Pillar" or the "Scone" is said to have been brought from Egypt to Ireland by a beautiful princess, who placed it in Tara's hall in 580 B. C. At present this very ancient relic is fastened underneath the coronation chair in Westminster abbey. The stone is of dark color, streaked with red, and is twenty-six inches long, sixteen inches wide and eleven inches thick. Its surface is much defaced, and a deep crack almost divides it into two parts. Tradition says that this stone can be traced back to the plains of Luz, where Jacob laid his head upon it and dreamed his ladder dream, and that at the captivity Jeremiah carried it to Egypt.

A Love Test.

This tale is told in the orient: A lady one day found a man following her, and she asked him why he did so. His reply was, "You are very beautiful, and I am in love with you." "Oh, you think me beautiful, do you? There is my sister over there. You will find her much more beautiful than I am. Go and make love to her." On hearing this, the man went to see the sister, but found she was very ugly, so he came back in an angry mood and asked the lady why she had told him a falsehood. She then answered, "Why did you tell me a falsehood?" The man was surprised at this accusation and asked when he had done so. Her answer was: "You said you loved me. If that had been true you would not have gone to make love to another woman."

Trout.

A trout is a trout from the day it is born, but not until it gets into the ocean is a salmon a salmon. While it lives in a river it is a parr. On the western coast August and September are the months for the principal run of salmon. Early fall is the season for eastern trout, followed by the German brown and Loch Leven in the late fall. Winter and early spring are the season for rainbow trout, and along in February comes the eastern brook trout, which is followed by lake trout and mykiss, commonly known as cutthroat trout, from a peculiar red marking on the throat.—New York Herald.

The Real.

The great actress brings a dress over from Paris. It costs her $1,000. She has to have four maids to help her get into it. When she comes out on the stage the public at once exclaims in rapture:

"This is indeed realism!"

What is she representing? Why, a Sicilian peasant girl.—Puck.

A Tempting Hint.

"Energy," said the young man who had been calling regularly for about a year, "energy and promptitude are wanted nowadays."

"Yes, indeed," replied the young lady, with meaning. "Just look at young Mr. Wilson. He only met Miss Anderson two months ago, and now they are engaged."

Naturally.

"What sort of people are these who are continually seeking divorce?" asked the reformer, with an agonized groan.

"Married people principally," responded the cheerful idiot, with a coarse guffaw.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Good Lesson.

Spouter—Did you gain anything on the horses last year? Sporter—Yep; I gained enough experience to teach me not to bet on them this year.

Most of our misfortunes are more supportable than the comments of our friends upon them.—A. Dumas.

Love Tokens.

The ancient English custom of giving love tokens on the 20th of August died out many years ago. The custom was for "enamoured maydes and gentlewomen" to give to their favorite swains as tokens of love little handkerchiefs three or four inches square, with a button or tassel at each corner and a small one in the center. The finest of these favors was edged with narrow gold lace or twist and then folded up in four cross folds so that the middle might be seen. They were worn by the fortunate swains in their hats or on the breast. The favors were generally the handiwork of the "faire mayde" herself, and well she liked to work the most beautiful figures she could for her favorite suitor, but they became so much in vogue in Queen Elizabeth's time that they were sold ready made in the shops. This, of course, destroyed the romance of the custom, and hence its death.

Trapping the Parson.

As William Morris was an Englishman, it may not seem remarkable to Americans that he did not always get his jokes right end first. In a biography of her husband Mrs. Edward Burne-Jones tells of the ease with which he reversed them.

They had all been asking conundrums.

"Who killed his brother Cain?" asked Burne-Jones.

Morris fell into the trap at once. "Abel!" he shouted.

Later in the day he came in laughing.

"I trapped the parson, by Jove!" he exclaimed. "I asked him, 'Who killed his brother Abel?'

"'Cain,' he said at once.

"'Ha!' I said. 'I knew you'd say that. Every one does.' I came away and left him puzzled enough, and I doubt if he's found out yet what the matter was."

Sharks Delicate In Captivity.

Sharks are rather delicate in captivity, and it is difficulty to keep them in aquariums. Whatever care may be bestowed upon them they do not seem to be able to stand confinement, however large the tank or pool may be. In captivity sharks swim round and round the tank, nine times out of ten taking one course and never reversing. A shark has been known to keep its course for three or four months without change and, except for food, never halting, so far as it was observed. It would keep going all day long and would be found going in the morning just the same. If food was placed in its way, it would stop for several minutes and eat, remaining headed the same way. Presently it would start on again in the same direction on its rounds, moving slowly unless disturbed.

Necessities of a Happy Life.

There are two fundamental necessities for a happy life—namely, a useful occupation for mind and body and an outlet for unselfish affection. The first requisite for enduring happiness is in having work to do in which one believes. Such work always aims at the accomplishment of something useful. While this work must be done with fair efficiency, it should not be accompanied with too much drudgery or exhaustion.

The simpler the plan on which one's living is modeled the less will be the complications and disturbances caused by an overelaborate scale of existence and the more time will be left for the real duties and pleasures of life.—From "Vital Questions," by Dr. Henry D. Chapin.

Korean Children.

The children of Korea are extremely quaint and pretty, especially when only a few years old. At New Year's they are generally dressed up in brand new frocks, and though, according to our ideas of taste, we should not give yellow sleeves to a bright red jacket and wear this over a green frock, I must say that somehow or other it looks all right there and relieves the monotony of the sempiternal white garments. The faces of the children are whitened with chalk, and the hair is oiled and parted in the middle, plastered down and tied into one or two small pigtails.—Cornhill.

Look Up When Speaking.

"I don't talk half as much as you do," said the preacher to the lawyer, "yet your voice holds out twice as long as mine. Why is it?"

The lawyer said he couldn't tell.

"The difference in the position of your head when you are talking explains it," said the elocutionist. "A preacher looks down upon his congregation, a lawyer looks up to the judge. That drooping of the head cramps the vocal cords and makes the preacher's voice more difficult to preserve than that of any other professional man."

Your Disadvantages.

Look your disadvantages squarely in the face and see what you can make out of them, and instead of complaining that you have not the right tools use well the tools you have. Go forward into a new battle and on to victory as though there never had been a failure in all your life.—Woman's Life.

INTERESTING HISTORY

W. C. T. U. of Fulton Indulge in Pleasant Reminiscences Embracing a Period of Fifteen Years.

(Paper Written and Read by Mrs. C. W. Streeter at the Fifteenth Anniversary, held on Friday, Nov. 17, in the Baptist Church.)

Have you ever given yourself the delight of following out a chain of events to see by what apparently disconnected circumstances—often trifles in themselves—God sometimes brings about His will?

In the Winter of 1890 the Rev. Mr. Davidson held evangelistic meetings here, which resulted in one of the greatest revivals Fulton has ever known. For months following the christian women held afternoon prayer meetings each week.

In October the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the State held their annual convention in Elmira. A Fulton lady, being in that city, attended the meeting. When next the women met, after her return, she gave such a glowing account of the work accomplished that all who were present felt that here was something practical we could and ought to do to answer our own prayers.

The next Sabbath notices were read in several churches, inviting all ladies interested in temperance to meet in the Baptist Church on Thursday afternoon, Oct. 30. When the large number who responded had listened to the earnest words of Mrs. Gardenier, twenty-two, by rising, expressed their willingness to become members of a union. These were Mrs. C. W. Streeter, Mrs. W. R. McCully, Mrs. R. McCully, Mrs. Sarah P. Cross, Mrs. S. A. Weed, Mrs. E. T. Shepard, Miss Helen DeLong, Mrs. Mattie Bailey, Mrs. M. E. Williams, Mrs. M. E. Althouse, Mrs. Mary Howe, Mrs. Mary Suydam, Mrs. Mary Gibbons, Mrs. Mary Goman, Mrs. W. A. Gifford, Mrs. J. P. Streeter, Mrs. Edna Moore, Miss Ruth Pearman, Mrs. A. King, Mrs. M. S. Pardee, Miss Addie Pardee and Mrs. William Sylvester.

Later the foregoing signed the following pledge:

"I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from using all distilled, fermented and malt liquors, including wine and cider, as a beverage, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same."

Of the charter members, seventeen are still living.

The first regular meeting occurred the following Tuesday, when twenty-two were present, and from then until now the union has never but once failed to meet at its appointed time—a terrible storm causing that failure. For three years the union met every two weeks. Since September, 1893, only monthly gatherings have been held.

Our city missionary, the Rev. Samuel Green, from the beginning, persistently urged the necessity of a permanent home for the union, that we might hold gospel temperance meetings. For years there is constant reference in the records to the effort being made to secure a suitable place, but it proved unavailing.

For a year the meetings were held in the parlors of the M. E. Church, by generous invitation of the trustees. The next three years the meeting place was usually the Baptist Church.

From 1895 the homes of the members have been opened to us; at first by invitation given a month previous; since 1900 by appointment and printed on a calendar at the opening of the year.

The membership of 22 grew to 48 in twelve months and reached its maximum—150—the second year. Since this time it has never fallen below 100, and has a sum total of 275 names. The smallest number of members present at any regular meeting was 8; the largest, 70; the average each year being from 16 to 31.

Mesdames Dibble, Platt, Moore and Edgarton enjoy the distinction of being present at every meeting for one year; Mrs. Schenck for two.

Each year we have been represented on W. C. T. U. day at Dempster camp meeting and also at the county convention of the union. Twice that body has convened here. The first time three parlor conferences of department superintendents were held, adding much to the practical usefulness of the gathering. At least one delegate, sometimes two, have gone to the State meeting; and twice Mrs. Moore has attended the National Convention. A fraternal delegate from the union attended the suffrage convention when it met in Fulton.

Mrs. W. R. McCully, our first president, seems to be emphatically the women's choice for that position, for while six have shared the honor of this office with her, she is now entering her sixth term. The other presidents for two years were Mrs. Guile, Mrs. Moore, Mrs. Carner, Mrs. T. J. Redhead, and for one year, Mrs. Platt and Mrs. Dibble. Mrs. McCully is a life member of the county union.

At first there were three vice-presidents—one each from the Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian church. Now there is a first vice-president and one from each of the nine churches. The faithfulness of seven recording secretaries has made this history possible—Mesdames Moore, Shepard, Platt, Suydam, Carner, McClellan and Palmer.

Nine treasurers have in turn carried the bag and jogged the memories of delinquent members for their dues—Mrs. Shepard, Mrs. Nettie Streeter, Mrs. Bailey, Mrs. Carner, Mrs. McClellan, Mrs. W. D. Peckham, Mrs. Burt, Mrs. Wetherby and Mrs. Edgarton.

The first six years three ladies held the office of corresponding secretary—Mrs. Gifford, Miss DeLong and Mrs. Dibble. In 1896 Mrs. Moore was elected to this place and still continues in it, the union realizing that the office of corresponding secretary should be permanent in any organization, so that the outside world may know whom to address.

Doubtless by this time you begin to wonder what has been accomplished in all these years. Before I answer let me say you are not the first to have asked that question of the union.

Twelve months at the beginning were spent in getting acquainted with ourselves, each other and the work, or what was expected of us. Six departments of work were undertaken, with a superintendent appointed for each.

The second year shows a great advance along all lines. Having cast about us and secured our bearings, we launched out into the deep. Of the forty departments for work outlined by the National Union, we undertook eight, viz.: Juvenile, Sunday School, literature, scientific temperance instruction, press, mothers' meetings, petitions, soldiers and sailors. Later there have been added evangelistic, flower mission, parlor meetings, systematic giving, non-alcoholic medication, narcotics, temple work, fair work and franchise. Not all of these have been attempted during any one period, but from the earliest years we have been a "do-everything" union. We now have a superintendent for mothers' meetings, press, parlor meetings, systematic giving, literature, flower and relief and Sunday School work.

New and Novel Device.

Mr. Frank Lasher has added an improvement to his already well-equipped stationery and book store in First street, which brings it well up to metropolitan standards and makes purchasing even more of a pleasure than heretofore. The article referred to is a multiplex display fixture for framed pictures and is complete in its perfection. The fixture is the only one of its kind in the State outside of New York City, and the only one which is eqipped with an apparatus for concentrating electric light on the pictures it contains. Mr. Lasher now has over 500 pictures on display in the device, at prices ranging from 60 cents upwards. All sizes, all styles, all schools, all kinds of frames, are represented in this collection, and the prices are lower than the cost of the frames, for the purpose of attracting attention during the Holidays. Nothing makes a more delightful or acceptable gift than an artistic picture, and one can surely be suited in this collection. Mr. Lasher invites all who are interested to visit his store, view the collection and the display fixture.

Prohibition Matters.

Clarence E. Pitts, the Prohibition leader, finds his motives impugned and his sincerity to Prohibition principles questioned by the Jefferson County Prohibition County committee. Mr. Pitts' course in the last election in tying his party up to candidates of other parties, was condemned in unmistakable terms and a resolution was adopted to the effect that the "convention condemn the action of placing the name of any man in nomination for any office, who was a member of any other party than the Prohibition party and that a copy of this resolution be sent to the State convention and also to Mr. Pitts, to whom it will appear as a vote of censure."

Mr. Pitts refuses to longer continue as chairman of the Oswego County Prohibition committee.

The Prohibition County committee will meet in Oswego on Dec. 12, at 1:30 o'clock. A call has been issued for the payment of pledges as there is a substantial deficit in the treasury of the organization.

Extremely Close.

Powell—"Yes; neither can borrow a cent from the other."—Woman's Home Companion for December.

Violent Death.

Henry A. Baker, aged 37, committed suicide at his home at Bowens Corners on Saturday by hanging himself in his barn. No cause other than melancholia resulting from financial embarrassment, can be suggested as the cause for the deed, which leaves a widow and four daughters without their natural protector. The deceased went to his barn about 11:30 Saturday morning and when called to dinner by his wife and did not respond Mrs. Baker thought perhaps he had gone to a neighbors on an errand and did not worry until two hours had elapsed, when she went to the barn to investigate his absence and found his lifeless body suspended from a beam. Coroner Cusack and Undertaker E. P. Cole were called. The deceased was a respected farmer and leaves beside his immediate family, his father, mother, two sisters, three brothers. The funeral services were held from the late home on Tuesday, and burial was made at Volney Center.

AMUSEMENTS.

The Empire Amusement Company of New York City, take great pleasure in announcing to the people of Fulton that they have made arrangement with Management Stephens Opera House for the appearance of their "King of Tramps Co," on Saturday afternoon and evening, Dec. 2. The play is different from other plays of this character. W. A. Tremayne, the author, has made the tramp a leading feature, requiring an actor of ability to play the great part. The play itself tells a tale of love, passion and intrigue very cleverly.

The company carries the entire scenic production. There are plenty of good singing and dancing specialties introduced throughout the play.

Prices: Matinee, children 10 cents, adults 20 cents; evening 25, 35 and 50 cents. Seats now on sale at Watson's drug store.

Dora Thorne" is proving one of the most interesting and successful new plays of the present season. The book of "Dora Thorne" had a wonderful vogue some years ago, and still has a steady circulation. As a novel of its class it has seldom been surpassed; a beautiful story of love written around a moral which is as powerful as it is true. "The consequences of sin seldom end with its originators," is an old adage but one which is ever new, coming up before us as a truth day by day, and one which shall do so as long as the world shall last. This theme is brought out in the play of "Dora Thorne" as in the book with a wonderfully original setting; tears and laughter follow in quick succession, sincere heart interest is manifest at every turn interwoven with the most powerful of all themes—"Love." "Dora Thorne" will be at Stephens Opera House, Friday, Dec. 1. Prices 25, 35 and 50 cents.

"Buster Brown" Coming.

"Buster Brown" will be presented in Stephen's Opera House on Wednesday, Dec. 6. To the average individual no description is necessary of that irrepressible small boy with the angelic, infantile expression, who for a long time past has made a specialty of finding trouble and appropriating it as his own in the comic supplements of the New York papers. Seats now on sale. Prices, 25, 35, 50 and 75 cents.

Proposed Evangelistic Campaign.

The ministers of this city and vicinity and a goodly representation of the laity were present at the Baptist Church on Monday morning at the meeting of the Pastors' Association. Plans for the prospective evangelistic services were discussed. A very earnest and interesting address was delivered by the Rev. R. E. Burton, D.D., pastor of the Delaware Avenue Baptist Church of Syracuse on "Personal evangelism." Dr. Burton is a logical and convincing speaker. The pastors of the churches which will unite in the union evangelistic efforts, together with three laymen from each church, will meet in the parlors of the Presbyterian Church at the close of the prayer meeting this Wednesday evening for the purpose of formulating plans for the evangelistic campaign.

PUBLIC LIBRARY BUILDING.

Will Be Dedicated in December—Valuable Memorial Lamps Donated for Main Entrance.

The Trustees of the Public Library have decided to finish the Assembly and Historical rooms in ample time for the dedication, which will take place during the month of December. The finishing of these rooms was not included in the contract made with Contractor Wadsworth last Winter, nor in the amount appropriated for the library building by Mr. Carnegie. The trustees, however, believe that the best interests of the library demand that these rooms shall be finished at once, and although funds are not now available for this purpose, yet it is sincerely hoped that sufficient can be obtained from further gifts and popular entertainments to realize their ambition. It is generally conceded by those competent to judge that when the library is completed it will be equal to any $20,000 library building in the State, so wise and judicious have been the expenditures.

The oak for the interior of the building, doors, windows, etc., the delay in the delivery of which was not through any fault of Mr. Wadsworth's, is now coming forward with reasonable expedition.

Two beautiful standard memorial lamps—one to be placed on each side of the main entrance—have been given by Mrs. M. H. Brando and Mrs. D. W. Gardner, in commemoration of their husbands, who were charter trustees of the Public Library Association.

MARRIED.

Miss Jennie Buell of this city was united in marriage in St. Paul's Church, Oswego, on Wednesday, with Mr. Peter W. McGann of that city.

On Wednesday evening, in Oswego, occurred the marriage of Mrs. Allen Mattoon and Mr. Roy Tallman of this city.

This Wednesday morning, at Grace Street M. E. Church parsonage, by the Rev. S. D. Robinson, Miss Pearl [illegible] rick and Mr. Hugh Clark were united in marriage—both residents of Fulton.

COMMON COUNCIL.

Beebe Syndicate Seeks Street Railway Franchise—Other Matters of Importance.

At a meeting of the Common Council, held on Tuesday evening, A. C. Lutz, representing the Beebe syndicate of Syracuse, presented an application for a street railway franchise for his company to lay tracks through the streets. Alderman Russell moved that the application be received and a hearing granted on Dec. 14. Mayor Brooker and the Council, after talking with Mr. Lutz, seemed to be favorably impressed with the project.

City Attorney Mead had effected a compromise with John O'Grady, whereby an action for $2,000 damages to his property from a drain overflow could be settled for $600. An investigation was ordered.

Dec. 14 will be grievance day, at which time a hearing will be given property owners in regard to the 1905 sprinkling assessment.

The public market has been removed from North First street to Wall street.

The following recommendations were presented:

Estimated cost of care of sick and indigent soldiers and sailors	$700
Charities department	3,000
Expenses of various departments under jurisdiction Board Public Works	17,500
Police and Fire Departments	12,515
Public Instruction	27,000
Payment of judgments against city	1,072.34

Schurz's First Editor.

From "Reminiscences of a Long Life," by Carl Schurz running in McClure's.

At prose, too, I tried my hand. Once after having written a composition on Schiller's "Maid of Orleans," which struck me as especially good, I found it difficult to resist the ambitious desire of seeing myself in print. I made a clean copy of the composition and carried it to the office of the Cologne Gazette, with a letter addressed to Levin Schucking, a well-known novelist of the time, and the literary editor of that great journal. In my letter I begged the privilege of a personal interview. A courteous answer fixed the day and hour of my visit, and soon I stood, with loud heart beats, at the great man's door, who, so I believed, held my literary future in the hollow of his hand. I found in him an amiable gentleman, with pleasant features, and large blue benevolent eyes. He received me very kindly, talked upon a variety of subjects, and finally returned my manuscript to me with the remark that it contained much that was excellent, but that I would do well to regard it only as a "study." I departed completely crushed with disappointment and mortification; but after all I lived to become sincerely grateful to good Mr. Schucking for his timely counsel. Much that I have since written has, in pursuance of his sound advice, been quietly treated as a "study" by myself.

UNCLE MORT'S THANKSGIVING

By ALICE LOUISE LEE

Copyright, 1905, by Alice Louise Lee.

WHEN a man stands on the verge of nervous prostration, ready to slide over any minute, it's time for him to change climates. I realized come Thanksgivin' time that I was fixin' to take the slide, so I rented my place and am searchin' out a spot destitute of hens and women. That combination cost me forty-five pounds of good flesh and more language than I've cast loose in years before.

You see, the Peters place lays alongside of mine—houses not more'n twenty-five feet apart. A year ago it was rented to some girls—graduates of an agricultural lunatic asylum that does business as the La Plume Agricultural college. Them graduates had made a scientific study of hens and laid out to show folks how a hen farm ought to be run.

They landed on the Peters premises with 100 Brown Leghorns, a few turkeys and enough assurance to run a county campaign. They discovered me the first day, and a mighty fine discovery to 'em I've proved to be. They begun callin' me "Uncle Mort" as soon as they sighted me and acted like I'd been born 160 years ago for the express purpose of waitin' on them!

There's four of 'em, and each has just as little sense as the others unless it's Helen. She's the youngest, and has either more or less, I hain't decided which yet. She's little and thinks she's cute. They always sent her over to ask me to do any of them little acts of "neighborly kindness" that kept me on the jump for a year. Her plan of attack was to hook her hands over my arm and shake her topknot over her eyes and lisp in baby talk to her "dear Uncle Mort" until I felt so like an idiot I couldn't think of a blamed excuse for not doin' such "neighborly kindnesses" as squeezin' into a two foot space under the barn to kill a woodchuck or climbin' on to the roof durin' a thunder shower to fix the lightnin' rod or buryin' a batch of Brown Leghorns.

I didn't object to this last job because I knew the poor critters longed to go. They didn't have half a chance to live or lay, they got such a lot of scientific care. They wa'n't let alone one minute in the twenty-four hours, and if there's a hen under the canopy that's fond of solitude and its own society it's the Brown Leghorn. They'll take a twenty foot board fence backwards any day at the swish of a skirt, and skirts never stopped swishin' around that henhouse. The poor things got reduced to pinfeathers and wishbones. They made a break for liberty whenever they see a chance, and they see a good many chances last winter when there was just enough crust on the snow to hold them up—and let me through at every jump. I chased 'em until I got thin as they was and as low in spirits.

Thinkin' of their sufferin', and when Thanksgivin' brought Billings I clutched at him as a drownin' man grabs a straw. He ain't very strawlike in appearance, bein' six feet one and over 200 pounds, but in him I thought I see sort of a Thanksgivin' for the hens.

One day the last of November Helen come billin' and cooin' around over her "dear Uncle Mort." I sized her up and waited. I wondered whether it would be mendin' the hen yard fence or doin' the fall house cleanin' or what not. I wasn't long findin' out. Wouldn't I be dear and lovely enough to allow Mr. Billings to sleep in my house and take his breakfasts with me? Then she blushed. He was a man she just happened to know, and he just happened to be passing through New Jersey a few days before Thanksgivin', and it happened that it would be convenient for her to entertain him, includin' his dinners and lunches, if her dear Uncle Mort would do the rest.

Well, as all the fools ain't dead yet, her dear Uncle Mort let him come. He proved a likely fellow, with a heap of common sense back of the homeliest face I ever saw move on legs. That is, he exhibited a deal of sense until he had been with that youngest hen farmer awhile. Then he lost it all. Got so he couldn't tell whether his head set on his shoulders or mine or whether his feet was located under him or over him. He left his shoes on his pillow and his white tie in the wash bowl. He dumped gravy in his coffee and poured cream on his bread until I was considerin' sendin' for a lunatic asylum with the idea of havin' it patronized extensively around that hen farm, when I woke up to the fact that he hadn't lost all his head. There was a corner left, and it was devoted to raisin' hens.

He was a farmer's son, and all the law he had put into his cranium hadn't knocked out the previous knowledge about hens. As soon as I realized that fact I tried to organize him into a Society For the Prevention of Cruelty to Brown Leghorns. I sneaked him out to the girls' hen lot and told him what them Leghorns had to put up with. I asked him if he ever see hens before with such loppin', discouraged lookin' combs.

He looked at 'em thoughtfully and chewed a straw. Then he allowed that they did look a bit under the weather.

"What's the reason?" says he.

"Reason!" says I gloomily. "Such a word ain't in use around these premises. Them hens have put up with enough lack of reason to kill 'em! You ought to have been here last summer. First hot day after they fell into this lunatic poultry scrape they went ... and hangin' their bills open, but they've never tried it since. The girls thought they had the gaps and acted accordingly. They caught them swelterin' birds and poured so much kerosene down 'em that the critters had sense enough to keep out of the sun for days for fear they'd explode!"

Says Billings solemly, "Do you swear to that statement?"

"Yes," says I, "when I ain't swearin' at it!" says I. "Now look at that rooster. He is the peakedest critter the sun ever shone on—looks for all the world like a henpecked husband. His eyes are almost turned wrong end about from lookin' behind him so much ain't crowed once since the red pepper campaign in September. It was moultin' season, only the girls didn't sense it. They'd never heard of hens moultin', and when they see so many feathers blowin' around loose Helen come over and borrowed a few pounds of red pepper. She explained that there was microbes workin' at the roots of the feathers and that pepper blowed inside would kill 'em. She didn't make it plain which would be killed, but time did. About half of the hens died, and that old rooster got so much of the hot stuff inside him that he thought he'd been overtook by the day of judgment. He thinks so yet. He ain't crowed since."

IT WASN'T THOUGHTFUL OF HIM.

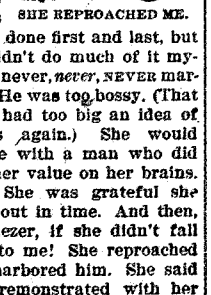
That finished Billings. He saw the sufferin's of them hens and remonstrated. He couldn't have done a worse thing for the hens or himself—or me—as it turned out.

He begun Thanksgivin' afternoon. I suppose he thought he'd got along far enough to give advice. It was as warm as September that day, and they was settin' out on an upheaved rock in their back yard while I wrestled with their henhouse door, which had dropped off its trolley arrangement. He begun by mildly suggestin' that they'd get eggs if they'd just drop the hens awhile from their callin' list and let 'em scratch for themselves.



Helen stiffened, as I could see out of the tail of my eye, and asked where he'd made a study of hens. He said he hadn't studied 'em. He'd made a point of avoidin' 'em back on his father's farm, and the process had agreed with both him and the hens.

She got stiffer and stiffer. Said she had made a special classroom study of them under one of the most scientific farmer professors in America and had learned that the best results ensued if the birds was made perfectly familiar with the human voice!

He sort of indicated in a general and inoffensive way that hens rather hear themselves squawk than any one else.

That's all I heard, but I wa'n't a bit suprised at the result. He generally come in nights pretty late with his homely face lookin' as if St. Peter had opened the gate a crack. That night he come in early lookin' like he'd glimpsed another spot. He set down and told me all about it, blubberin' like a six-year-old. While the quarrel had begun on hens, it hadn't stayed there. As near as I could make out, the difference had ended by includin' everything in heaven above or earth below. Them hens had played the mischief with his Thanksgivin', that was sure!

Then I did something I'm ashamed to own. I offered to mix in. I said that I was sure her dear Uncle Mort would have some influence with her. So I mixed in and found out that her dear Uncle Mort could have minded his own business with advantage. I went over to see her. There was a deal of talkin' done first and last, but I remember I didn't do much of it myself. She would never, never, NEVER marry Mr. Billings. He was too bossy. (That was hens!) He had too big an idea of himself. (Hens again.) She would never, never live with a man who did not place a higher value on her brains. (Again, hens.) She was grateful she had found him out in time. And then, shades of Ebenezer, if she didn't fall to and pitch into me! She reproached me for havin' harbored him. She said that if I had remonstrated with her when she asked my advice about his comin' she would have been spared all this. At that I mopped my face and come home. The last thing I heard just outside my door was that she should devote her life to bringin' up hens the way they ought to go.

SHE REPROACHED ME.

That was the first and last matchmakin' job I ever tackled voluntarily. Next mornin' I was back into the business involuntarily.

That man Billings come downstairs to breakfast deaf, dumb and blind. He looked as if he'd lost his last friend except me. I had reason to wish before many hours that he'd lost me. After breakfast he wrung my hand loose at the wrist, picked up his grip and started for the train. I have two doors in my sittin' room close together. One leads into the hall and one don't. He opened the one that don't and landed right eye and forehead was done up. The rest of his face was held down by court plasters.

SQUEEZIN' INTO A TWO FOOT SPACE TO KILL A WOODCHUCK.

Of course I didn't send for Helen. I thought I'd miss bein' a bigger fool than I knew I was, but I didn't. It seemed I'd left undone just what I'd ought to do, and it didn't take me long to find it out either. I had started for the well, when she come racin' and boohoohin' across the back yard from the henhouse. She seemed out of breath, but she wa'n't. She had enough left to stop and tackle me with on the spot. I learned more in two minutes about my general disposition and tendencies than I'd learned before in forty-five years.

Why had I left her darlin' in rough men's hands when there was she a-lovin' him to distraction only a few feet away? Why was I so insensible to her feelin's as not even to send her news of his condition? And didn't I realize I was guilty of murder in the first degree to have a celler door next my hall door?

This wa'n't all, but it's a fair sized specimen. She disappeared inside the door like a small monsoon, leavin' me staggered. After I'd recovered some I went in and found her on her knees in front of the couch kissin' every spot she could find vacant on that chap's face. And after she got through with it each spot looked better than a whole face taken together does ordinary. But it was her language that I couldn't stand. It wasn't exactly on the order that she'd been usin' to me, and I judged it wa'n't exactly what he'd been used to hearin' from her either, but I gathered from her remarks that she was ready to give up hen raisin' and devote herself to fragments.

About that time I bolted. There is things that a sensible man like me can't stand up against. I went out on the back stoop, and there I found I wa'n't the only critter that was makin' a break for liberty. Helen had left the hen yard gate open, and every bird was makin' a bee line for parts unknown. Then and there I see my finish. I see I'd be called on to hunt stray hens till Christmas, and I decided on this here healthful change of climate.

I set down on the spot and wrote an advertisement. I made it strong. I showed up all the advantages of rentin' a neat little country place with all the improvements, includin' delightful neighbors so near by. In less'n a week that ad. had done the business.

KISSIN' EVERY VACANT SPOT.

Just passin' my troubles along to some man? Not by a long shot! I wouldn't be so underhanded. I rented my premises to a widow and two small children—lively little chaps, I hear, that charge 5 cents a run per hen!

What Turkeys Eat.

Turkeys are the greatest grasshopper exterminators in the world. When very young they must be fed bran, but after that they pick up their own food. For the starchy elements they eat waste wheat from stubble fields; for the vegetable part of their diet they devour several varieties of weed and grass seeds, and for meat substance they consume grasshoppers and bugs.

It wasn't very thoughtful of him to do it, seein' there's only one of me and more than enough of him for two, but I done my best with the fragments. I gathered 'em up and carted 'em upstairs. The doctor and I fitted the pieces together as near as we could judge where they belonged and stretched the result on the parlor couch. There's no gettin' around the fact that Billings is homely when he is whole, but, viewed as a lot of fragments, he was enough to give a man the nightmare. His left arm was bandaged. His lip was sewed. His Wonders of the Eye.

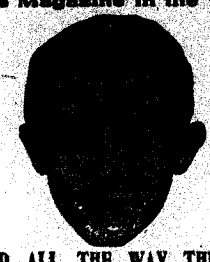
Viewed as an optical instrument, the human eye may well be called perfect, for it is an apparatus contained in a globe less than an inch in diameter, in which is produced an image practically perfect in form and color and which can be accurately adjusted almost instantly for every distance from five inches to infinity, which is movable in every direction, has an area small enough for the detection of the most minute details and at the same time large enough for the appreciation of large objects, and which enables us to see all shades of color and to estimate distance, solidity, and, to some extent, the consistency of objects, and yet this wonderful instrument, perhaps the most varied in its capabilities of any part of the body, is persistently misused and neglected. Is it any wonder that some day nature resents this treatment and leaves the offenders in total and perpetual blindness?



The Name of China.

We speak of China and the Chinese, little thinking that the natives of the Flowery Kingdom never hear those terms until after leaving the place of their birth or coming in contact with some traveler. They have many names by which they designate themselves and the land which they inhabit, but Chinese and China are not among the number. The most ancient name of China is Tienhai, which signifies "beneath the sky." Since the present ruling house took control of the empire in 1650 the name of Tatsingkwoh has been applied to the kingdom as a whole and Chungkwoh to that portion known to American readers as the Middle Kingdom.

WILLIAM E. HUGHES, Editor.

Publication Office, 56 South First St.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 29, 1905.

IT has been suggested to the TIMES that an arrangement might be entered into with the committee selected by the Oswego Chamber of Commerce and the Fulton committee on "Old Home week," to widen the scope of the invitation so as to include the entire county. At least Fulton and Oswego City could co-operate on so important a matter as the Volney centennial and the celebration could be divided in such a manner as to increase the interest and arouse the enthusiasm of all present and former residents of this section.

THE election of Curtis Guild, Esq., to the governorship of Massachusetts, revives an extremely pleasant recollection of that gentleman's visit to Fulton and his masterly address before the Chamber of Commerce and its friends. Those who heard Mr. Guild will not soon forget his description of the indifference of an elector in the "Back Bay district" of Boston, where the failure of one man to attend his ward primary was followed with political disaster to the entire State and nation. The speaker's high ideals and exhortation to good, clean citizenship, were ineradicably impressed on his hearers, and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts has abundant reason to be proud of such a representative. Governor-elect Guild, while here, was entertained at dinner by President Redhead of the Chamber of Commerce.

NOT WILLING TO SHARE HIS JOY.

The editor of the TIMES felicitates the editor of the Patriot upon his newborn resolution to be a Republican and upon the joy and peace that pervades his soul on so momentous a decision. Like a child with a new toy, he fondles and coddles the party of his latest choice, and holding it up to the world, babbles of its many beauties, to the amusement of all. Like the child, he is selfish of his toy, and it grieves him to think that it must be shared. He has a few friends with whom he has been playing for a little while back and he is willing that they share his Republicanism, but he shrieks and wails because "there are others" whom he cannot put to political death because of their Republicanism.

One has only to look back a short period of time to find the editor of the Patriot just as enthusiastic for the Democratic party and urging his readers to make a cross-mark in the voting space at the head of the Democratic column. A courteous reference to Mayor-elect Foster, which appeared recently in the TIMES, has been described by our hypercritical cotemporary as "nauseous praise of a Democrat."

The enthusiasm of the editor of the Patriot has inspired the following lines, which we present with humble apologies to our readers:

How describe him? 'Midst a hundred he were easily discerned;
You would know him by the figure in the coat that he has turned;
You would know him by his smirking 'neath the hat that he has doffed
Unto all the different parties which at other times he scoffed.
By the grace of his illusions to the party that he's "wrung:"
Or the ease with which he changes any tune that he has sung.
Seer and sage, there are none like him; he stands all alone, the chief;
Other men there are and queer ones, but none like him in belief.
Spare him, Fate, to try to lead men, and fresh flowers of speech to cull,
And the annals of which party he adorns should not be dull.

Every Ounce You Eat.

Every ounce of food you eat that fails to digest does a pound of harm. It turns the entire meal into poison. This not only deprives the blood of the necessary tissue-building material, but it poisons it. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure is a perfect digestant. It digests the food regardless of the condition of the stomach. It allows that organ to rest and get strong again. Relieves Belching, Heart Burn, Sour Stomach, Indigestion, Palpitation of the Heart, etc. W. H. Cook, Tilton, N. H., says: "I have taken Kodol Dyspepsia Cure and find it the best remedy for all stomach troubles. It is worth its weight in gold." Sold by H. C. Giesler and G. T. Boyington.

Golden Anniversary of a Popular Weekly.

It has fallen to the lot of very few of the leading publications of the United States to survive the vicissitudes of half a century. One of the fortunate ones is Leslie's Weekly, the first illustrated weekly newspaper established in the United States, and which, on December 14, will celebrate its fiftieth anniversary. When the late Frank Leslie started this publication, in 1855, it was questioned whether he would be successful or not. He was an Englishman and believed that if England could support several first-class illustrated weeklies the United States could support one, and his judgement proved to be correct. Two years after he began the publication of his weekly he had a lively competitor, issued by the Harper Brothers, and still in existence. A unique feature of the Golden Anniversary number of Leslie's Weekly will be an exact copy, full-size, 16 pages, of the first issue of Leslie's Weekly. This will afford the reader a fine opportunity, by comparison, to judge of the wonderful progress of the art of printing and engraving during the past fifty years. The Golden Anniversary number of Leslie's will contain a number of special features that will make it unusually attractive and valuable.

Phoenix Register: The sad intelligence comes to friends here of the sudden death of Mrs. G. E. Williams and her daughter, Mrs. C. E. Meade, which occurred at their home in St. Louis. The Right of Way.

In the early days of western railway building, days not so long gone by as to be out of memory, there were many exciting races between rival roads for the possession of important mountain passes. Such a race, says the World's Work, was that between the Santa Fe and the Rio Grande roads for the right of way through Raton pass to New Mexico and the southwest.

Engineers and construction gangs worked in mad haste to get to it ahead of their rivals. The victory fell to the chief of the Santa Fe. When the Rio Grande cohorts arrived they found him alone in one of the big gorges, shovel in hand, slicing earth from an 8,000 foot hill.

"What are you doing here?" they asked.

"Constructing a railroad," he replied. He turned another shovelful of dirt, dropped the tool and hitched up his heavy cartridge belt.

"Any one who interferes with the Santa Fe does it at his own risk," he said quietly.

First the Rio Grande men laughed, and then they raged, and then they turned and went away. Their road was cut off from the south forever.

A Bath In Bubbles.

"To take a bath at Tiflis, in Russian Caucasia, is to court a never to be forgotten experience," says one who knows. "The masseur who presides over the toilet of his patrons is a weird looking figure. His head is shaved, a rag is twisted around his waist, and his feet are dyed a beautiful red. You are seized by this individual, rubbed, pushed face downward on a marble slab, find his feet in your spine and his hands upon your shoulders. Then he grinds his feet up and down your back. They are round your neck, on your head—everywhere! Then he vaults lightly off, and in a moment, from a linen bag filled with soap, he has squeezed clouds of perfumed bubbles, and you are hidden in them from head to foot as completely as if you had fallen into a snowdrift. You are not absolutely bruised, but you are clean."—Kansas City Journal.

He Rested.

"Good morning, Uncle Charles. Did you sleep well? I'm afraid your bed was rather hard and uneven, but"—

"Oh, it was all right, thank you. I got up now and then during the night and rested a bit, you know."

Flattered Her.

"Yes," said the fair young girl, "everybody says I'm just the picture of innocence."

"Well," replied the gallant youth, "you're certainly a fetching picture."

Different.

"How different you get your inspiration from [illegible] from my own."

A Thanksgiving Lay

By CHARLES STOW

[Copyright, 1905, by Charles Stow.]

IN the wooing and mating time of spring,
When bluebells blossom and bluebirds sing,
By the shy hen turkey hidden away,
To greet May's coming, an egg there lay.

BUT the sly bird vainly seeketh a screen
In distant cover of vernal green,
For a bright eyed lassie pursues the quest
Till she discovers the stolen nest.

A bright eyed lassie pursues the quest.

CAREFULLY stepping, she daintily holds
Her bran-specked prize in her apron folds
Till deftly and snugly consigned to rest
Under the sitting hen's ruffled breast.

AND the teeming month of June shall see
In the shade of the old sweet apple tree
A top-heavy bantling flutter and sprawl,
Whenever it hears the good dame call.

IN the sultry days of ruddy July,
Roaming afield where the grass is high,
With a plaintive peep and vigilant peck,
Skulks something, princip'ly legs and neck.

WHEN leaves are falling and flowers have fled,
In black and bronze and cardinal red,
With a proud spread tail and a rampant wing
Struts the barnyard's pride, the menu's king.

MID the falling flakes of a wintry night
The farmer looms in the lantern's light,
And with gleaming blade and a final flop
A foul deed's done for the poultry shop.

The farmer looms in the lantern's light.

AND gobbler that gobbled the early worm
Is festively gobbled in his turn,
And the egg the sly turkey hid away
Proves to have been a Thanksgiving lay.

THANKSGIVING IN JAPAN.

"Yankees of the Orient" Have a Day of Their Own.

Americans have fondly imagined that Thanksgiving day is an institution peculiar to themselves. Not so. The wonderful "Yankees of the orient," as the Japanese have been called, are like us in more ways than one. One of the resemblances lies in the fact that both countries have a national thanksgiving. Perhaps it would be more modest to say that we are like the Japs in this respect, for they had their Thanksgiving first. It is not known just how old the institution is with them, but it must date back some centuries. The day is celebrated on the 17th of October, and thus, with them as with us, it is a thank offering for the harvests and so occurs in the autumn.

The day opens in Japan by the mikado going to the shrine before sunrise and offering thanks and supplications to God and to the spirits of his ancestors. After the rising sun, which is Japan's emblem, comes out over the picturesque hilltops of the island empire a state banquet is ordered, and similar banquets are had all over the kingdom. The Japs have no turkeys to grace the occasion, but they have other toothsome dishes peculiar to themselves. It is probable that they do not indulge in gluttony quite as much as we, for they are an abstemious people. Then the day, if not inclement, is spent in parks and under the trees.

It is safe to say, however, that while the Japanese Thanksgiving antedates ours, nothing was known of it by our Puritan ancestors.

Washington's First Thanksgiving.

The initial national Thanksgiving was held under a proclamation by George Washington in the first year of the new republic, 1789. Washington issued one other proclamation of like nature in 1795. Adams also issued one or two, and Madison called for a day of thanks after the close of the war of 1812. So far as presidential notice was concerned, the day was allowed to lapse, however, until permanently revived by Abraham Lincoln in 1863. In 1870 congress passed a law making the day set apart by the president as one for offering thanks a national holiday.

Code of Honor at Annapolis

THE case of Midshipman Minor Meriwether, Jr., of the Naval academy at Annapolis has raised the query whether a false sense of honor prevails to a large extent among the young men in attendance at this institution. The United States Military academy, like other academies where instruction for naval or military service is imparted, has many time honored traditions, and the conduct of students is often governed more by them than by the regularly adopted and published rules of the school. Midshipman Meriwether had a disagreement with a fellow student named James H. Branch, Jr. Meriwether is alleged to have insulted Branch, applying to him the epithets "sneak" and "coward." According to the code of honor said to prevail among many students at Annapolis, this necessitated a challenge from the person insulted. In former times the difference would have been settled by pistols or swords, but as dueling is not allowed in these days the fist fight, with referee, timekeeper and seconds, has been substituted. Meriwether belongs to the third class at the academy, and Branch belonged to the second. Meriwether thought he was being ill treated by Branch, his superior officer in the cadet organization, and took the matter up with his class.

It is said that the class to which Branch belonged directed him to challenge and that Meriwether's class directed him to accept the invitation to combat. At any rate, the contest was held in strict accordance with the unwritten rules of the code of honor, which, it is reported, is not only accepted by the students of the academy, but indorsed by the officers of the navy. These provide that the contestants shall fight stripped to the waist for twenty-eight rounds if able to stand up that long. When it is considered that matches between pugilists are usually limited to a less number of rounds than this and that even then the men are trained for weeks beforehand for the contest, the severity of a struggle in which two youths of less than twenty and without any training fight for such a length of time is apparent.

Branch received injuries from which he died two days afterward, and steps were at once taken by the head of the navy department, Secretary Bonaparte, for a full investigation of the whole subject. The case brings up not only the question of abolishing fights of this character, but the propriety of many other customs or ideas which prevail at Annapolis. At the bottom of the traditional code of honor is said to be a perverted idea of what constitutes a gentleman.

TECUMSEH, "THE GOD OF 2.5."

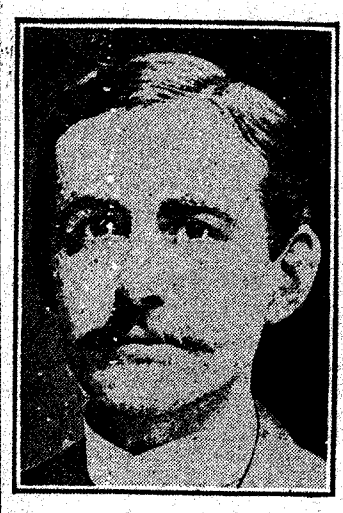
The United States Naval academy, the "university of the seas," is a great institution and one of which every American may be proud, and it is held by its friends that investigation of the Meriwether-Branch case may result in abolition of abuses just as in the past the investigation of flagrant cases of hazing resulted in diminishing such practices. Hazing of "plebes"—that is, men in their first year—continues, but has been robbed of some of its rougher features. Many of the traditional practices of this nature are considered harmless and necessary to prevent the "plebe" from assuming that as soon as he has entered the academy he is qualified to be a rear admiral. Taking a few reefs in his pride inspires him with respect for superior officers and eventually has more influence than all his studies in making a good sea fighter of him. When the candidate for admission to the academy takes his examinations he observes a curious custom, which is called saluting the "god of 2.5." To do this he walks up to an old figurehead of the Delaware in front of the chapel, representing the Indian chief, Tecumseh, stands erect and solemnly touches his hat to it. This ceremony is supposed to help him not to fall below 2.5 in his marks. The "plebe" is subjected to a great many tests of patience and good nature called "running." He cannot dance at balls, walk in "Lovers' lane" or speak to an upper classman without saying "sir." He is asked:

"Well, who are you?"

"Smith, sir."



"Oh, no, you are not! You are the wild man from Borneo. Do you savvy? Now tell me who you are?"

"The wild man from Borneo, sir."

LLOYD C. GRISCOM.

Young American Diplomat Who Made Hit With Japanese.

Lloyd C. Griscom, who as minister to Japan figured a great deal in the dispatches from the orient during the hostilities between the mikado and the czar, may soon be an ambassador, the youngest in the diplomatic service of the United States and perhaps in that of any country. Raising the American legation to the rank of an embassy is expected to heighten the cordiality of the relations already existing between Japan and the United States, and Mr. Griscom has contributed not a little to the promotion of this friendship. Although so young he has quite a list of diplomatic achievements to his credit, and his career has not been lacking in interesting adventures. His father, Clement A. Griscom, was formerly president of the International Navigation company. The present representative of the United States in Japan was born in Riverton, N. J., in 1872. He enjoyed a liberal education, graduating at the University of Pennsylvania and studying law at that institution and also at the New York Law school. He got his first experience in diplomacy about a dozen years ago as private secretary to Thomas F. Bayard, then American ambassador to the court of St. James. In 1895-96 he was a newspaper correspondent in South America, and in his company were Somers Somerset and Richard Harding Davis. The adventures of the party figured afterward in Mr. Davis' story of "Three Gringoes In Venezuela."

He was an officer in the war with Spain, and on its conclusion was appointed secretary of the United States legation at Constantinople, and was charge d'affaires in the absence of Minister Straus during several strenuous periods. He got $100,000 from Abdul Hamid for damages to the property of American missionaries, was with the sultan when the latter averted a panic in the palace during an earthquake and was one of several diplomats attacked by Turkish soldiers in a riot. In reward for his services at Constantinople he was appointed minister to Persia. He married Miss Elizabeth Duer Bronson about this time. The ceremony in St. Margaret's, London, was a notable event in society and diplomatic circles, and he took his bride on a wedding journey of a thousand miles through Persia.

CARL V. OF NORWAY

The Danish Prince Who Has Been Elected to a Throne.

The first king of Norway, Prince Charles of Denmark, has been known as the "sailor prince," and as Norwegians are famous as a seafaring people his love for the sea will help to make him popular with them. It was reported at one time that if elected king he would take the title of Haakon VII., which would connect him in association with the last of the vikings, Haakon VI., who reigned in the fourteenth century. But he has selected the title of Carl V. Prince Charles was chosen king of Norway as the result of a plebiscite in which the vote was 246,481 for a monarchy and 64,445 for a republic. He is the second son of the Crown Prince Frederick of Denmark and was born on Aug. 3, 1872. In 1896 he married Princess Maud, the favorite daughter of King Edward VII. of England. They have a son, Prince Alexander Edward Christian Frederick, who was born July 2, 1902.

Hobbes and Geometry.

Hobbes was not yet fifteen when he went to Oxford. He did not much care for logic, yet he learned it and thought himself a good disputant. There is no reason to think he learned anything else at Oxford save a strong dislike of academic institutions and methods. He turned from the official studies to amuse himself with geography and voyages. As to mathematics, there was no official recognition of them at all while Hobbes was at the university, so there is nothing improbable in the statement that Hobbes had never opened a copy of Euclid until he was near middle age. The story is best told in Aubrey's own words:

"He was forty years old when he looked on geometry, which happened accidentally. Being in a gentleman's library, 'Euclid's Elements' lay open, and it was the forty-seventh proposition Lib. I, so he read the proposition. 'By George,' says he, 'this is impossible!' So he read the demonstration of it, which referred him back to another, which he also read, 'et sic deinceps,' that at last he was demonstratively convinced of that truth. This made him in love with geometry."

The Oldest Tale of a Tub.

The cynics, so called from the Greek word for a dog, were a rude, snarling sect of so called philosophers, who despised riches, the arts and all culture. Among these Diogenes was conspicuous. He was born in 412 B. C., and when a man he dressed in a coarse robe, which covered him day and night, and carried a wooden bowl and a bag for his alms and his food. His home was a large tub discarded from the temple of Cybele, a huge earthen jar, that had held wine or oil for the services and sacrifices of the temple. Though cracked and patched, it was large enough to hold him lying at full length. The story goes that Alexander the Great came up to him one day and asked what he could do for him. "Don't stand between me and the sun," was the curt reply, upon which the emperor is said to have exclaimed, "If I were not Alexander I would be Diogenes!"

The Wise Wife.

Mrs. Tom—I wouldn't let my husband have his own way as yours does. Mrs. Dick—Does he? Mrs. Tom—I heard him say so today. Mrs. Dick (softly)—I'm glad he thinks so. I've been a long time teaching him that.

Long Words.

SPECIALISTS FAILED; CAL-CURA SUCCEEDED.

One Bottle of Dr. Kennedy's NEW Medicine, Cal-cura Solvent, Cured Mr. Fuller of Bladder Trouble.

"My case is so remarkable that I want to tell you all about it. I suffered from bladder trouble for about 25 years, and had tried all the doctors about here, and also two specialists in New York, without getting any help. Last August I bought a bottle of Cal-cura Solvent, Dr. Kennedy's new medicine. I had not been able to work at my trade (boiler making) for some time, but after taking one bottle of Calcura Solvent, I began work and have been working ever since. Cal-cura Solvent has done more for me in a month than all the doctors did in 20 years, and I don't complain of the doctors."—Martin Fuller, Matteawan, N. Y. All druggists, $1.00.

The Cruel Plant.

A Canadian climber, the Physianthus albens, has received the name of "cruel plant" from its ill treatment of butterflies. It flowers in the month of August, and the butterflies, attracted by the perfume, hover around it in large numbers and push their trunks into the corollas to sip the honey. A pair of sensitive vegetable pinchers in the heart of the flower grips the delicate proboscis, and in spite of struggles to get free the butterfly hangs suspended until it dies. Apparently the plant has nothing to gain by the death of the insect, as it is not carnivorous, like the Venus fly trap. In fact, if the butterfly were allowed to come and go it would tend to foster the species by assisting cross fertilization. It appears, however, that the "cruel plant" came originally from Brazil, where the butterflies are much stronger and extricate their suckers from the trap. We may add that another Canadian plant, the Cnicus discolor, is charged with cruelty. The flower has a gland which secretes a viscous liquid capable of liming insects which are fond of it. Moreover, they seem to be stupefied and poisoned by it, and no reason can as yet be assigned for the deadly consequence.

A Colossal Harp.

The largest harp ever made, so far as is known, was that invented and constructed by M. Veritan, provost of Burkli, near Basel. It was known as the gigantic meteorological Æolian harp. It was 320 feet in length and was erected in the garden of its inventor in 1787. This harp consisted of fifteen iron wires, 320 feet in length, stretched between two poles. The wires were from two to three inches apart, the largest being one-sixth of an inch in thickness and the smallest one-twelfth of an inch. They were placed in the direction of north and south and inclined in such a manner as to form an angle of from twenty to thirty degrees with the horizon, being stretched by means of rollers properly disposed for the purpose. Whenever the weather changed the wires sounded with such loudness that it was impossible to go on with a concert in the house. The sound sometimes represented the hissing noise of water in rapid ebullition, sometimes that of a harmonicon and sometimes that of distant chimes or an organ.

The First Hats.

Discoursing on the subject of hats an antiquary expressed the opinion that the hat was first used quite as much for decoration as for protection. The ancestor of all hats he considers to have been the fillet, or band, around the hair worn by the ancient Greeks, among others. Probably the first hint gained by men regarding head ornaments was through observing the crests, plumes and antlers of various birds and beasts. The eastern races, with their fondness for ceremony and display, afford the most notable instances of the use of hats as signs of rank and authority. Thus in Buddhist countries the gods are represented as wearing elaborate forms of headgear. In Korea the fashion attains its height, no fewer than fifty kinds of hats being worn by the natives as indications of their social position.

The Horse's Hoof.

In its present elaborate form the hoof of a horse is the most perfect instrument of support which has been devised in the animal kingdom to uphold a large and swiftly moving animal in its passage over the ground. The original toe nail and the neighboring soft parts connected with it have been modified into a structure which in an extraordinary manner combines solidity with elasticity, so that it may strike violent blows upon the hard surface of the earth without harm. The result is that the horse can carry a greater weight at a swifter speed than any other animal approaching it in size.

Three Tombs at Westminster.

In the east walk of the cloisters at Westminster abbey there are three most interesting graves—those of Thomas Betterton and his wife, better known as Bess Saunderson, and the ever fascinating Mrs. Bracegirdle. Of all the people who lie within these hallowed walls it may safely be said that Betterton has the best claim of all to this privilege. No small measure of praise must be accorded to this gifted actor for the fact that he almost more than any one else was responsible for the resuscitation of the English drama after the stern regime of the Puritans. Mrs. Bracegirdle was either adopted by Betterton or placed under his care, and she very soon took all hearts in London by storm. She achieved her greatest success in acting in Congreve's plays. Her artistic career, however, was a comparatively short one, for Mrs. Bracegirdle retired from the stage in dudgeon when Anne Oldfield first became her dangerous rival. She lived on in honorable retirement and beloved by all, high and low, far and near, until the year 1748, when she was buried here beside her old friends the Bettertons.—London Mail.

How Dreams Are Weighed.

An ingenious instrument which demonstrates the close connection that exists between dreams and brain calculation is known as the "tilt board." A long, shallow tray big enough for a man to recline upon is balanced exactly upon a steel blade. A subject is placed upon it and put to sleep, whereupon the end containing his feet generally falls. But eventually the subject begins to dream, and then the tray containing the sleeper's feet reascends, the extent to which it moves varying according to the vividness of the dream. The explanation is that the blood leaves the brain of a sleeper directly the mental activities cease, and, the head as a result becoming lighter, that end of the balance rises. When the sleeper dreams small quantities of blood are recalled to the brain to supply the dreams, and the balance is gradually changed. In this way dreams may be weighed.

Some Seasonable Advice.

It may be a piece of superfluous advice to urge people at this season of the year to lay in a supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is almost sure to be needed before winter is over, and much more prompt and satisfactory results are obtained when taken as soon as a cold is contracted, and before it has become settled in the system, which can only be done by keeping the remedy at hand. This remedy is so widely known and so altogether good that no one should hesitate about buying it in preference to any other. It is for sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Why His Head Didn't Ring.

Two Scotsmen turning a corner came into collision. The shock stunned one of them. He pulled off his hat and, laying his hand on his brow, said: "Sic a blow. My heid's a-ringing again."

"Nae wonder," said his companion. "Your heid was aye empty—that makes it ring. My heid disna ring a bit."

"How could it ring," said the other, "seein' it was aye crackit?"—Scottish American.

Still Had a Little Pride.

"What is this man charged with?" asked the police justice.

"Stealing a dog, your honor," said the officer.

"Well, sir, what have you got to say for yourself?"

"Your honor," answered the prisoner, drawing a grimy coat sleeve across his nose, "if you'll make it embezzlement I'll plead guilty. I may be a thief, but I've got feelings."—Chicago Tribune.

A Judicious Inquiry.

A well known traveling man who visits the drug trade says he has often heard druggists inquire of customers who asked for a cough medicine, whether it was wanted for a child or for an adult, and if for a child they almost invariably recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The reason for this is that they know there is no danger from it and that it always cures. There is not the least danger in giving it, and for coughs, colds and croup it is unsurpassed. Lightning as a Rock Driller.

"Lightning when in the mood has an ugly habit of drilling," writes an English observer. "It will drill the hardest rock, rock which would turn cold steel, and not only drill but vitrify it. They have found in Cumberland channels from thirty feet deep and from two to four inches in circumference. The interior was hard and glazed where the solid substance had been melted by the stabbing flashes. Artificial experiment has shown that a powerful shock from a battery will vitrify finely powdered glass, but not feldspar or quartz. The lightning, however, does it in the manner described—not in one place, but in many, showing that before striking the ground it divided into several branches, each strong enough to penetrate and liquefy the solid rock."

Could Not Be Better.

The uniform success of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has won for it a wide reputation and many people throughout the country will agree with Mr. Charles W. Mattison, of Milford, Va., who says: "It works like magic, and is the best preparation I know of. It couldn't be any better." He had a serious attack of dysentery and was advised to try a bottle of this remedy, which he did, with the result that immediate relief was obtained. For sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Auctioneers In England.

The auctioneers of the United Kingdom cannot claim to belong to a very ancient profession so far as that country is concerned. Though auctions were familiar institutions in ancient Rome, the first in the British islands is said to have been held about 1700, when Elisha Yale, governor of Fort George (Madras), put up for sale his trophies of the east, and, although "auction" was defined in 1678 as "a making a publick sale and selling of goods by outcry," it does not appear to have been recognized then as a British institution. The word "auctioneer" does not occur before the eighteenth century.

Lorenzo Dow and Burr.

When the timid colonial clergymen were afraid to criticise Aaron Burr's treason they asked Lorenzo Dow what he thought of Burr's meanness. He raised both hands like a great V and shouted: "Aaron Burr mean! Why, I could take the little end of nothing whittled down to a point, punch out the pith of a hair and put in 40,000 such traitor souls as his, shake 'em up, and they'd rattle."

An Ardent Lover.

"And you went straight to her father and demanded his daughter's hand?"

"I went straight enough, but I—well, I'll admit that I didn't carry out my original purpose."

"Scared?"

"Scared! No, sir! But we got to talking stocks, and I forgot all about it."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

He Goes Out.

"That's a pretty swell smoking jacket you've got on," said the caller.

"Smoking jacket?" replied Henpeck. "Why, this is my house coat."

"Well, that's the same thing"—

"Well, I guess it isn't the same thing; not in this house. When I want to smoke I have to put on my overcoat."—Philadelphia Press.

For Thin Babies

Fat is of great account to a baby; that is why babies are fat. If your baby is scrawny, Scott's Emulsion is what he wants. The healthy baby stores as fat what it does not need immediately for bone and muscle. Fat babies are happy; they do not cry; they are rich; their fat is laid up for time of need. They are happy because they are comfortable. The fat surrounds their little nerves and cushions them. When they are scrawny those nerves are hurt at every ungentle touch. They delight in Scott's Emulsion. It is as sweet as wholesome to them.

A Time For Thanks

By ARTHUR J. BURDICK

[Copyright, 1905, by Arthur J. Burdick.]

'TIS rest time an' blest time, an' time to lift the voice
In glad Thanksgivin' anthems—time now to rejoice
That fruit time brought a plenty; that harvest toil is o'er;
That larder, granary an' bin hold now a bounteous store.

Swing back the smokehouse door, there
An' take a peep within!
Those hams so brown a-hangin' down
Say, "Let the feast begin!"

Fiddler, let 'er go!

'TIS rare time an' spare time, the time to lift the heart
With swellin' thoughts o' gratitude to Him who doth impart
To us such bounteous blessin's; to us such pleasures rare.
'Tis time to ope the generous hand an' all them blessin's share.

Set goin' the corn popper;
Lay chestnuts on the coals;
Thanksgivin's here, dispense the cheer
An' gladden other souls.

'TIS cheer time an' dear time, an' time to gather in
The loved ones o' the neighborhood, an' all the kith an' kin;
Lengthen out the table, an' let the cloth be spread
Time for fellowship an' love, an' time for breakin bread.

Tune the fiddle, strain the string,
Rosin well the bow;
Get yer partners on the floor—
Fiddler, let 'er go!

Let the feast begin.

'TIS glad time, but sad time, fer memories arise
O' loved ones givin' thanks this year up yonder in the skies;
An' though we know 'tis better so, an' they are happy there,
Our eyes will dim whene'er they fall upon the vacant chair.

But let us be rejoicin'
An voicin' thankful prayer;
Those friends to dear blest us when here,
An' we shall meet them there.

UNCLE SAM'S THANKSGIVING

In These Days It Covers Much of the Earth's Surface.

It must be remembered that the president's proclamation appointing a day of thank offering and praise to the Most High goes not only to the forty-five states and territories, but also to the new island dependencies of the republic—Porto Rico, Hawaii and the Philippines. The natives of these tropical climes take quite kindly to any sort of a holiday, especially a holiday that involves a feast, so that Thanksgiving is already popular among them. Uncle Sam's national bird, the gobbler, is not well known to them yet, but it is quite probable that they will appreciate his highness when they are better acquainted with his succulent qualities. There are enough native Americans in the various islands, including soldiers, merchants, officials, schoolteachers and the like, to see that the introduction is properly brought about.

Thanksgivings of the Revolution.

There were eight Thanksgiving days appointed by the Continental congress for observance among the colonies during the war for independence. After the one called for the purpose of celebrating the peace treaty, which was held in 1784, the day was allowed to lapse until 1789, when Washington took his seat as president. The idea in these early days was to offer thanks on some special occasion. That our ancestors could find eight such occasions during the dark days of the Revolution shows that they were ready to be thankful on somewhat slim provocation. But it also shows that the gobblers shed their blood for the country as well as the men.

In a Man's Pockets.

A fairly well equipped gentleman true to his calling and to his friends carries quite a kit of tools. There are a jackknife, a match box, a cigar cutter, a nail file, a corkscrew, a finger nail tool and possibly a cigar holder and some good five centers to give away. And yet women wonder what he finds to put in his pockets. To facilitate further the business of just hanging around he must have a little money, a handkerchief, bunch of keys, fountain pen, some lead pencils and sharpener, eyeglasses, notebook, watch, old letters, papers of more or less supposed value and a cardcase. Not one pocket could be spared unless it is the one on his nightshirt, and that looks so sweet.—Clay Center (Kan.) Times.

An Ashantee Belle.

On the Ashanti Gold Coast the costume of a reigning belle is less a matter of well fitting clothes than of well spiked hair. The hair is first divided into a half dozen braids; then these braids are stiffened with wax and tar until they are as hard as kindling wood and stick out straight from the head in a semicircle like the spokes of a wheel. Thus coiffured the belle is ready to conquer all hearts.

A Bargain Rush.

"How did the manager get all those women out of that burning theater so quickly?"

"He went on the stage and announced that a man down at the entrance was giving away samples of baking powder."

Everything must go, everything must be sold. Owing to our being unable to be more centrally located, and to get a store large enough for the business we would want, and other reasons that we do not care to mention, we decided it would not pay us to remain as we are. This entire stock of this season's up-to-date merchandise will be thrown upon the public for what it will bring. A great chance for clothing buyers to stock up for years, as never will there be a chance to buy reliable merchandise at the greatest sacrifice ever was known. Entire stock must be closed out regardless of cost in as short time as possible. Entire stock was made for this Fall and Winter trade and embraces the very latest styles.

A Hatter's Trick.

"There are tricks in every trade, you know," said a New York clubman. "Even in retail hat selling many dodges are employed.

"I said to a hatter one day:

"'I don't see how you can afford to iron for nothing all the silk hats you sell.'

"The man nodded at me gravely.

"'We have to do it, sir,' he said. 'The hats would last too long if we didn't.'"

The Last Word.

"Does your wife insist on having the last word?" asked the person who indulges in impertinent questions.

"Not at all," answered Mr. Meekton. "It is quite customary for me to close the conversation with 'very well,' or some such remark, to indicate that I understand what Henrietta intends to convey."—Washington Star.

"The dearest?" asked the husband, with a sardonic laugh. "Then it's certain that you'll take it."

A QUEEN IN EXILE.

Pathetic Story of Ranavolo of Madagascar—Her French Pension.

There is a pathetic side to the story of Ranavolo-Manjaka III., the deposed queen of Madagascar, who is now on a visit to Paris. She was once ruler over 3,000,000 people and a territory measuring 250,000 square miles. She came to the throne of Madagascar in 1882, when a war was in progress, and it was her duty on several occasions to appear before the assembled thousands of her warriors and stimulate them by a few stirring words to enthusiasm for a brave defense of their fatherland. On one such occasion she said: "I am a woman, but I have the heart of a man, and I myself will stand up and lead you to fight with those who would take away our land. God forbid that we should become slaves of the foreigner."

But the tide of war and of fortune was with the foreigner. In 1885 the war was terminated by a treaty in which the French acquired protectorate rights over Madagascar, and Ranavolo became a vassal queen instead of an independent sovereign. Ten years later hostility toward the French again led to war, with the result that Ranavolo was deposed, while Madagascar became a French colony. She was exiled first to the island of Reunion and thence, in 1899, to Algiers, where she has to live except when she obtains special permission from the French government to pay a visit to some other place. She has received a regular pension for years, and in deference to public sympathy for the exiled queen it was recently raised from 30,000 to 50,000 francs.

INTERESTING HISTORY

W. C. T. U. of Fulton Indulge in Pleasant Reminiscences Embracing a Period of Fifteen Years.

[Paper Written and Read by Mrs. C. W. Streeter at the Fifteenth Anniversary, held on Friday, Nov. 17, in the Baptist Church.]

From the first, true to the name, we have been emphatically a temperance organization. Showing our faith by our works, we have done all we could for no-license. Seconding the efforts of the voters, we have distributed literature, served lunches and held numberless little meetings in churches or country school houses. Children have been taught temperance songs and given white ribbons to wear at election times; 400 such bows were sent to Volney Center and Mount Pleasant. Large pictures of children were given, to be put in the windows and bearing the legend, "vote for me." When there was an effort for high license, we put ourselves on record, as against any license, either high or low. Not alone when the subject of no-license was being tested, nor only when the clergymen sought to punish the law breakers for illegal selling, sitting all day in the stuffy courtroom and bearing the insolence of the opposing counsel, but always, we have done whatever the temperance men have asked us to do for the cause. Ten dollars were given in Oswego Falls in their no-license campaigns; $10.00 at one time and $25.00 at another were given the Citizen's League during its fight for temperance. After no-license was secured, a drinking-cup was chained to each public fountain, so that none would be required to suffer from thirst. Tea and coffee were served at the Prohibition Convention; coffee at the Prohibition [illegible] and $5 was given to the [illegible] Anniversary.

[illegible], where else could its victories be won save in its native air. Whenever any vital temperance question was at issue, all-day prayer meetings have been held, on election day. One such day was in March '92, when the town of Volney went no-license. A few weeks later a day was spent in prayer that illegal liquor-selling might be stopped. April 8, '97, was set apart in response to Frances Willard's last call to prayer for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the organization.

The Oswego Falls ladies observed election day, November, '99, and the Congregational Church bell was rung each hour.

In March, 1900, 213 ladies were present in the all-day meeting on this side of the river, and again the men at the polls, as they started to vote for rum, had their hand stayed, as by an unseen power, when a church bell rang out its message of warning to them.

Mr. Green was always pleased to have the union take charge of the evening services at Grace Chapel, especially when he hoped to win temperance votes by it. Six such services were held the first year, and several just before election other years.

The flower mission was for seven years faithfully cared for by Mrs Andrews. Since home cares have prevented her doing this work, Mrs. Rust, Mrs. Harding, Mrs. Schenck and Mrs. Kempston have served. Until '99 the express companies carried the flowers free of charge to the New York Fruit and Flower Mission, and from 1,000 to 2,000 bouquets a year were sent, with thousands of text cards; besides dolls, canned fruits and jellies. Since we have had to pay if they went over 100 miles, we have sent them to the Women's and Children's Hospital, Syracuse. Once this hospital received twenty-five night dresses from our union. Not all of our flowers have gone out of town. Each Memorial Day our soldiers have been given bouquets tied with white ribbon. Once these were accompanied by a card bearing our motto, "For God, home and native land." This seemed very fitting and must have awakened tender memories as they thought of the sacrifices they had made for that home and land. The meeting in June is always devoted to the flower mission, as this is the birth-month of Jennie Cassiday, the National Flower Mission Superintendent, and it is the time when nature is most lavish with her flowers. Many old people have been remembered with flowers. Auntie Case's 94th birthday, April 13, '97, was brightened by a gift of carnations—our union's memorial flower. One of the last little attentions Father Streeter received was a potted plant from the union, and the lovely lilies gave him much pleasure.

A CHRISTMAS CAROL.

Prof. F. D. Losey Of Syracuse University, Will Give His Celebrated Reading from Dickens in First M. E. Church, December 15.

Prof. Frederick D, Losey, of Syracuse University will give his celebrated reading entitled "A Christmas Carol" by Dickens, on Friday evening, December 15th, at eight o'clock, at the First Methodist Episcopal church. The entertainment is given under the auspices of the Floral Committee and tickets are now on sale. Evidently a rare treat is in store for a Fulton audience as the following clipping will show:

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 27, 1894.

My Dear Mr. Losey:

I do not know that anything I can say will be of any use to you, since your delicate apprehension and very great power in rendering the characters you undertake can well speak for themselves, yet as an evidence of my own appreciation, and I believe of that of every one of the twelve hundred and fifty persons who composed your audience of Saturday last, let me assure you that no person who has appeared before our association in three annual lecture courses, has given more universal pleasure, and left a more favorable and lasting impression, than yourself. Yours very truly,

BASIL SOLLERS,
President of the Public School Teachers' Association of Baltimore.

"Buster Brown."

There is probably not a theatre-goer in this wide land who is not familiar with the name of "Buster Brown" and his attendant misfortunes. The dramatized "Buster Brown" will be presented at Stephens' Opera House this Wednesday evening, December 6, with the same elaborate detail, that characterized its run at the Majestic Theatre, New York City, of one hundred nights and two hundred nights in Chicago, Ill. There is an exceedingly large and powerful company of artists, a ballet, chorus, carloads of costly scenery and electrical effects, to say nothing of "flood and spot lights." "Buster Brown" should prove to be an immensely popular attraction, not only to the children but to those of larger growth. Prices 25, 35, 50, 75 cents. Seats now on sale at Watson's.

County Beekeepers' Association.

The annual meeting of the Oswego County Bee-keepers' Association will be held at Fulton, N. Y., on Thursday, Dec. 14. Dr. C. F. Phillips of Washington, D. C., will be present and address the meeting. The F. W. Lasher Reading Club.

The F. W. Lasher Reading Club is the newest innovation in this city, and one destined to become the most popular with people of all literary tastes. As soon as a copyrighted novel leaves the press it will be found on Mr. Lasher's shelves, and it may be read by any one for two cents per day. Everyone wants to read the latest fiction when it is fresh and everyone else is reading and talking about it, and yet one seldom cares to purchase the book, so the club exactly fills the want.

One may become a yearly member with the privilege of borrowing as many books as one wishes, for $4.

What a splendid Christmas gift for the book lover, a year's membership in the club would prove. Why not decide upon the gift at once?

Evangeline Picture Play.

This, the most popular of America's poems, illustrated with our 100 beautiful pictures, will be given by Prof. W. D. Lewis, under the auspices of the Current Events and Timely Topics Clubs of this city, at the State Street M. E. church on Tuesday evening, December 19. The proceeds, after paying expenses, to be given toward the fitting up of the Assembly room in the new library building. The admission will be 25 cents. Prof. Lewis' illustrated lecture has given excellent satisfaction wherever he has presented it.

Superintendent A. B. Blodgett of Syracuse has the following to say concerning it: "Mr. W. D. Lewis gave our five hundred teachers a rare entertainment at Lincoln Hall last evening. His reading of Evangeline was both strong and sympathetic, and the beautiful and well chosen illustrations gave a vivid interpretation to the poem."

K. of P. Ladies' Night.

The members of Pathfinder Lodge, K. of P., will give a reception to their lady friends at their lodge rooms in the Reynolds block next Friday evening, Dec. 8. CURRENT EVENTS CLUB.

Plans Perfected for Illustrated Lecture on "Evangeline," by Prof. Lewis, Syracuse University, in Aid of Public Library—Interesting Session.

The usual fortnightly meeting of the Current Events Club was held on Monday evening at the home of Dr. and Mrs. L. Fowler Joy, and was well attended.

Chairman Fairgrieve, in behalf of the Executive Committee, who were delegated to examine into the advisability of holding an entertainment this Winter for some philanthropic purpose, reported that several propositions had been under advisement by the committee. Many excellent suggestions were made, but the consensus of opinion was to engage the services of Prof. W. D. Lewis of Syracuse University to deliver his inimitable and deservedly popular illustrated lecture on "Evangeline," which would not only be intensely interesting but instructive. The co-operation of the Timely Topics Club was secured and the trustees of State Street M. E. Church had kindly donated the use of the church for that purpose. The time set was Tuesday evening, Dec. 19, at 8 o'clock. Tickets costing 25 cents can be procured from members of either club. The proceeds from the lecture will be devoted toward furnishing the assembly room of the public library, which will cost about $1,600, and for which no provision had been made in Mr. Carnegi 's gift. The library trustees, however, had personally assumed the obligation because of their desire to have the assembly and historical rooms completed in time for the dedication of the building this month.

As a prelude to presentation of the program for the evening, Mr John Hunter, the leader, asked Mrs. Joy to favor the assemblage with a Scotch song, which was rendered in excellent voice and expression and proved a unique and enjoyable innovation.

Dr. Joy gave a resume of the sanitation practiced by the Japanese medical corps during the late war with Russia, contrasting it with the methods in vogue in the United States army and navy during the Spanish-American war, much to the disadvantage of the latter.

Mr. W. [illegible] to the [illegible] Conference [illegible] City, giving [illegible] able purposes it hopes to [illegible].

Mr John Hunter's discussion embraced events of importance, interspersed with interesting incidents of Hetty Green, John D. Rockefeller. Among the more important themes discussed was the Japanese loan, the economic and political condition of Russia, the reception tendered the new King of Norway, the proposed strike of the anthracite coal miners, insurance scandal, the Legal Aid Society of New York, the Children's Court or "Elder Brother" movement, the Panama Canal and the efforts made toward sanitation, concluded an excellent programme.

By request, Mrs. Joy sang another Scotch ballad, which brought forth an encore and the meeting adjourned.

The next session will be held on Monday evening, Dec. 18, at the home of Mrs. John Hunter. The leaders will be Messrs. Giles S. Piper and Arvin Rice.

PROPOSED ELECTRIC ROAD.

Syracuse & Ontario Railroad Company Makes Application for Franchise.

Mr. C. A. Luz of Syracuse, who represents the Ewbs syndicate [illegible] is seeking a franchise for an electric railway through the city, of which a TIMES representative yesterday. Mr. Luz states that the syndicate which he represents are investors and operators of the Auburn & [illegible], Rochester, Syracuse & [illegible] and the Syracuse, Lakeside & Baldwinsville Railway. They are not speculators and have no securities for sale on the market, should a franchise be granted by the city council within a reasonable time, Mr. Luz states, work will begin on the extension of the road to Fulton in the Spring, as engineers are now making definite surveys.

The road will cross the river at or near Phoenix and will then secure a private right of way to the east corporation line; thence northwest and north in First street to its intersection with Oneida; thence west along Oneida street and across and over the new Oswego River bridge to Worth street; thence along Worth street to First and along First street to the north boundary of the city of Fulton.

When asked about a proposed belt line around the city, Mr. Luz intimated that it would cause in [illegible] for the conveyance of freight in the manufacturing districts.

Coke
For Stove and Furnace

When you buy a pound of coke you buy heat—more heat than is obtainable from a pound of coal. This is a fact, a well known fact.

In bulk you buy double the quantity, coal being the heavier.

You don't buy dirt, you don't buy odor, you don't buy slate or clinkers—coke don't produce them.

Coke, therefore, is more than a money saver—is preferable for more than one reason.

Try It.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

President Roosevelt's annual message has been delivered to congress. Opening with a plea for the co-operation of all classes in continuing the country's prosperity and in correcting existing evils, for a "square deal" for everybody, the message first takes up the question of corporations and railroad rate legislation. The president says:

Corporations.

I am in no sense hostile to corporations. This is an age of combination and any effort to prevent all combination will be not only useless, but in the end vicious, because of the contempt for law which the failure to enforce law inevitably produces. The corporation has come to stay, just as the trades union has come to stay. Each can do and has done great good. Each should be favored so long as it does good. But each should be sharply checked where it acts against law and justice.

Experience has shown conclusively that it is useless to try to get any adequate regulation and supervision of these great corporations by state action. Such regulation and supervision can only be effectively exercised by a sovereign whose jurisdiction is coextensive with the field work of the corporations—that is, by the national government. I believe that this regulation and supervision can be obtained by the enactment of law by the congress. If this proves impossible, it will certainly be necessary ultimately to confer in fullest form such power upon the national government by affirmative acment of the constitution.

The laws of the congress and of the several states hitherto, as passed upon by the courts, have resulted more often in showing that the states have no power in the matter than that the national government has power; so that there at present exists a very unfortunate condition of things, under which these great corporations doing an interstate business occupy the position of subjects without a sovereign, neither any state government nor the national government having effective control over them. Our steady aim should be by legislation, cautiously and carefully undertaken, but resolutely persevered in, to assert the sovereignty of the national government by affirmative action.

This is only in form an innovation. In substance it is merely a restoration, for from the earliest time such regulation of industrial activities has been recognized in the action of the law-making bodies, and all that I propose is to meet the changed conditions in such manner as will prevent the commonwealth abdicating the power it has always possessed, not only in this country, but also in England before and since this country became a separate nation.

Railroad Rate Legislation.

As I said in my message of Dec. 6 last, the immediate and most pressing need so far as legislation is concerned is the enactment into law of some scheme to secure to the agents of the government such supervision and regulation of the rates charged by the railroads of the country engaged in interstate traffic as shall summarily and effectively prevent the imposition of unjust or unreasonable rates. It must include putting a complete stop to rebates in every shape and form. This power to regulate rates, like all similar powers over the business world, should be exercised with moderation, caution and self restraint, but it should exist, so that it can be effectively exercised when the need arises.

In my judgment, the most important provision which such law should contain is that conferring upon some competent administrative body the power to decide upon the case being brought before it whether a given rate prescribed by a railroad is reasonable and just, and if it is found to be unreasonable and unjust then, after full investigation of the complaint, to prescribe the limit of rate beyond which it shall not be lawful to go—the maximum reasonable rate, as it is commonly called—this decision to go into effect within a reasonable time and to obtain from thence onward, subject to review by the courts.

It sometimes happens at present, not that a rate is too high, but that a favored shipper is given too low a rate. In such case the commission would have the right to fix this already established minimum rate as the maximum, and it would need only one or two such decisions by the commission to cure railroad companies of the practice of giving improper minimum rates. I call your attention to the fact that my proposal is not to give the commission power to initiate or originate rates generally, but to regulate a rate already fixed or originated by the roads upon complaint and after investigation. A heavy penalty should be exacted from any corporation which fails to respect an order of the commission. I regard this power to establish a maximum rate as being essential to any scheme of real reform in the matter of railway regulation.

It is worth while considering whether it would not be wise to confer on the government the right of civil action against the beneficiary of a rebate for at least twice the value of the rebate. This would help stop what is really blackmail. Elevator allowances should be stopped, for they have now grown to such an extent that they are demoralizing and are used as rebates.

Private Car Lines.

All private car lines, industrial roads, refrigerator charges and the like should be expressly put under the supervision of the interstate commerce commission or some similar body so far as rates and agreements practically affecting rates are concerned. A rebate in icing charges or in mileage or in a division of the rate for refrigerating charges is just as pernicious as a rebate in any other way.

There should be publicity of the accounts of common carriers. Only in this way can violations or evasions of the law be surely detected. A system of examination of railroad accounts should be provided similar to that now conducted into the national banks by the bank examiners. A few first class railroad accountants, if they had proper direction and proper authority to inspect books and papers, could accomplish much in preventing willful violations of the law.

Employers' Liability Law.

In my annual message to the Fifty-eighth congress at its second session I recommended the passage of an employers' liability law for the District of Columbia and in our navy yards. I renewed that recommendation in my message to the Fifty-eighth congress at its second session and further suggested the appointment of a commission to make a comprehensive study of employers' liability with a view to the enactment of a wise and constitutional law covering the subject, applicable to all industries within the scope of the federal power. I hope that such a law will be prepared and enacted as speedily as possible.

There has been demand for depriving courts of the power to issue injunctions in labor disputes. Such special limitation of the equity powers of our courts would be most unwise. It is true that some judges have misused this power, but this does not justify a denial of the power any more than an improper exercise of the power to call a strike by a labor leader would justify the denial of the right to strike. The remedy is to regulate the procedure by requiring the judge to give due notice to the adverse parties before granting the writ, the hearing to be ex parte if the adverse party does not appear at the time and place ordered. What is due notice must depend upon the facts of the case. It should not be used as a pretext to permit violation of law or the jeopardizing of life or property. Of course this would not authorize the issuing of a restraining order or injunction in any case in which it is not already authorized by existing law.

I renew the recommendation I made in my last annual message for an investigation by the department of commerce and labor of general labor conditions, especial attention to be paid to the conditions of child labor and child labor legislation in the several states. Such an investigation should take into account the various problems with which the question of child labor is connected. In such a republic as ours the one thing that we cannot afford to neglect is the problem of turning out decent citizens. The future of the nation depends upon the citizenship of the generations to come. The children of today are those who tomorrow will shape the destiny of our land, and we cannot afford to neglect them. The legislature of Colorado has recommended that the national government provide some general measure for the protection from abuse of children and dumb animals throughout the United States. I lay the matter before you for what I trust will be your favorable consideration.

As to Women Who Work.

The department of commerce and labor should also make a thorough investigation of the conditions of women in industry. Over 5,000,000 American women are now engaged in gainful occupations, yet there is an almost complete dearth of data upon which to base any trustworthy conclusions as regards a subject as important as it is vast and complicated. The introduction of women into industry is working change and disturbance in the domestic and social life of the nation. The decrease in marriage, and especially in the birth rate, has been coincident with it. We must face accomplished facts, and the adjustment to factory conditions must be made, but surely it can be made with less friction and less harmful effects on family life than is now the case. This whole matter in reality forms one of the greatest sociological phenomena of our time. It is a social question of the first importance, of far greater importance than any merely political or economic question can be.

In any great labor disturbance not only are employer and employee interested, but also a third party—the general public. Every considerable labor difficulty in which interstate commerce is involved should be investigated by the government and the facts officially reported to the public.

Insurance.

The great insurance companies afford striking examples of corporations whose business has extended so far beyond the jurisdiction of the states which created them as to preclude strict enforcement of supervision and regulation by the parent states. In my last annual message I recommended "that the congress carefully consider whether the power of the bureau of corporations cannot constitutionally be extended to cover interstate transactions in insurance." Recent events have emphasized the importance of an early and exhaustive consideration of this question, to see whether it is not possible to furnish better safeguards than the several states have been able to furnish against corruption of the flagrant kind which has been exposed.

It has been only too clearly shown that certain of the men at the head of these large corporations take but small note of the ethical distinction between honesty and dishonesty. They draw the line only this side of what may be called law honesty, the kind of honesty necessary in order to avoid falling into the clutches of the law. Of course the only complete remedy for this condition must be found in an aroused public conscience, a higher sense of ethical conduct in the community at large and especially among business men and in the great profession of the law, and in the growth of a spirit which condemns all dishonesty, whether in rich man or in poor man, whether it takes the shape of bribery or of blackmail. But much can be done by legislation which is not only drastic, but practical. There is need of a far stricter and more uniform regulation of the vast insurance interests of this country. The United States should in this respect follow the policy of other nations by providing adequate national supervision of commercial interests which are clearly national in character.

I repeat my previous recommendation that the congress should consider whether the federal government has any power or owes any duty with respect to domestic transactions in insurance of an interstate character. That state supervision has proved inadequate is generally conceded.

The Revenues.

There is more need of stability than of the attempt to attain an ideal perfection in the methods of raising revenue, and the shock and strain to the business world certain to attend any serious change in these methods render such change inadvisable unless for grave reason. It is not possible to lay down any general rule by which to determine the moment when the reasons for will outweigh the reasons against such a change. No change can be made on lines beneficial to or desired by one section or one state only. There must be something like a general agreement among the citizens of the several states that the change is needed and desired in the interest of the people as a whole, and there should then be a sincere, intelligent and disinterested effort to make it in such shape as will combine, so far as possible, the maximum of good to the people at large with the minimum of necessary disregard for the special interests of localities or classes, but in time of peace the revenue must, on the average, taking a series of years together, equal the expenditures or else the revenues must be increased. Last year there was a deficit. Unless our expenditures can be kept within the revenues then our revenue laws must be readjusted.

It is impossible to outline what shape such a readjustment should take, for it is as yet too early to say whether there will be need for it. It should be considered whether it is not desirable that the tariff laws should provide for applying as against or in favor of any other nation maximum and minimum tariff rates established by the congress, so as to secure a certain reciprocity of treatment between other nations and ourselves.

Economy In Expenditures.

I earnestly recommend to the congress the need of economy and, to this end, of a rigid scrutiny of appropriations. All unnecessary offices should be abolished. In the public printing also a large saving of money can be made. There is a constantly growing tendency to publish masses of unimportant information at which no human being ever looks.

Yet, in speaking of economy, I must in nowise be understood as advocating the false economy which is in the end the worst extravagance. To cut down in the navy would be a crime against the nation. To fail to push forward all work on the Panama canal would be as great a folly.

Currency.

Every consideration of prudence demands the addition of the element of elasticity to our currency system. The evil does not consist in an inadequate volume of money, but in the rigidity of this volume, which does not respond as it should to the varying needs of communities and of seasons. Inflation must be avoided, but some provision should be made that will insure a larger volume of money during the fall and winter months than in the less active seasons of the year, so that the currency will contract against speculation and will expand for the needs of legitimate business. At present the treasury department is at irregularly recurring intervals obliged in the interest of the business world—that is, in the interests of the American public—to try to avert financial crises by providing a remedy which should be provided by congressional action.

Business Methods In Departments.

At various times I have instituted investigations into the organization and conduct of the business of the executive departments. While none of these inquiries have yet progressed far enough to warrant final conclusions, they have already confirmed and emphasized the general impression that the organization of the departments is often faulty in principle and wasteful in results, while many of their business methods are antiquated and inefficient. I recommend that the congress consider this subject.

Federal Elections.

In my last annual message I said:

"The power of the government to protect the integrity of the elections of its own officials is inherent and has been recognized and affirmed by repeated declarations of the supreme court. There is no enemy of free government more dangerous and none so insidious as the corruption of the electorate. No one defends or excuses corruption, and it would seem to follow that none would oppose vigorous measures to eradicate it. I recommend the enactment of a law directed against bribery and corruption in federal elections. The details of such a law may be safely left to the wise discretion of the congress, but it should go as far as under the constitution it is possible to go and should include severe penalties against him who gives or receives a bribe intended to influence his act or opinion as an elector and provisions for the publication not only of the expenditures for nominations and elections of all candidates, but also of all contributions received and expenditures made by political committees."

I desire to repeat this recommendation.

All contributions by corporations to any political committee or for any political purpose should be forbidden by law, directors should not be permitted to use stockholders' money for such purposes, and, moreover, a prohibition of this kind would be, as far as it went, an effective method of stopping the evils aimed at in corrupt practices acts.

The Hague Conference.

The first conference of nations held at The Hague in 1899, being unable to dispose of all the business before it, recommended the consideration and settlement of a number of important questions by another conference to be called subsequently and at an early date. These questions were the following: (1) The rights and duties of neutrals; (2) the limitation of the armed forces on land and sea and of military budgets; (3) the use of new types and calibers of military and naval guns; (4) the inviolability of private property at sea in times of war; (5) the bombardment of ports, cities and villages by naval forces. In October, 1904, at the instance of the interparliamentary union, I issued invitations to all the powers signatory to The Hague convention to send delegates to such a conference and suggested that it be again held at The Hague.

From all the powers acceptance was received, coupled in some cases with the condition that we should wait until the end of the war then waging between Russia and Japan. The emperor of Russia, immediately after the treaty of peace which so happily terminated this war, in a note presented to the president on Sept. 13 took the initiative in recommending that the conference be now called. The United States government in response expressed its cordial acquiescence and stated that it would as a matter of course take part in the new conference and endeavor to further its aims. We assume that all civilized governments will support the movement and that the conference is now an assured fact. This government will do everything in its power to secure the success of the conference to the end that substantial progress may be made in the cause of international peace, justice and good will.

Monroe Doctrine.

There are certain essential points which must never be forgotten as regards the Monroe doctrine. In the first place, we must as a nation make it evident that we do not intend to treat it in any shape or way as an excuse for aggrandizement on our part at the expense of the republics to the south.

But we must make it evident that we do not intend to permit the Monroe doctrine to be used by any nation on this continent as a shield to protect it from the consequences of its own misdeeds against foreign nations. The Monroe doctrine does not force us to interfere to prevent the punishment of a port save to see that the punishment does not assume the form of territorial occupation in any shape. The case is more difficult when it refers to a contractual obligation. This country would certainly decline to go to war to prevent a foreign government from collecting a just debt. On the other hand, it is very inadvisable to permit any foreign power to take possession, even temporarily, of the custom houses of an American republic in order to enforce the payment of its obligations, for such temporary occupation might turn into a permanent occupation. The only escape from these alternatives may at any time be that we must ourselves undertake to bring about some arrangement by which so much as possible of a just obligation shall be paid.

To do so insures the defaulting republic from having to pay debts of an improper character under duress, while it also insures honest creditors of the republic from being passed by in the interest of dishonest or grasping creditors. Moreover, for the United States to take such a position offers the only possible way of insuring us against a clash with some foreign power. The position is therefore in the interest of peace as well as in the interest of justice.

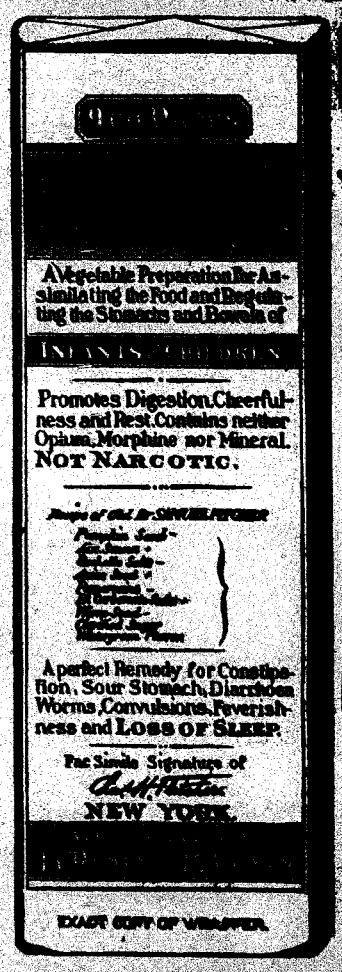
Santo Domingo.

Santo Domingo has now made an appeal to us, and not only every principle of wisdom, but every generous instinct within us, bids us respond to the appeal. The conditions in Santo Domingo have for a number of years grown from bad to worse until a year ago all society was on the verge of dissolution. Fortunately just at this time a ruler sprang up in Santo Domingo who, with his colleagues, saw the dangers threatening their country and appealed to the friendship of the only neighbor who possessed the power and the will to help them. There was imminent danger of foreign intervention. The patience of foreign creditors had become exhausted, and at least two foreign nations were on the point of intervention and were only prevented by the unofficial assurance of this government that it would itself strive to help Santo Domingo in her hour of need.

Accordingly, the executive department of our government negotiated a treaty under which we are trying to help the Dominican people to straighten out their finances. This treaty is pending before the senate. In the meantime a temporary arrangement has been made under which the Dominican government has appointed Americans to all the important positions in the customs service, and they are seeing to the honest collection of the revenues, turning over 45 per cent to the government for running expenses and putting the other 55 per cent into a safe depositary for equitable division in case the treaty shall be ratified among the various creditors, whether European or American.

Under the course taken stability and order and all the benefits of peace are at last coming to Santo Domingo, danger of foreign intervention has been suspended, and there is at last a prospect that all creditors will get justice, no more and no less. If the arrangement is terminated by the failure of the treaty chaos will follow, and sooner or later this government may be involved in serious difficulties with foreign governments over the island or else may be forced itself to intervene in the island in some unpleasant fashion.

Army and Navy.



I do not believe that any army in the world has a better average of enlisted man or a better type of junior officer, but the army should be trained to act effectively in a mass. Provision should be made by sufficient appropriations for maneuvers of a practical kind.

Provision should be made for the promotion of exceptionally meritorious men over the heads of their comrades and for the retirement of all men who have reached a given age without getting beyond a given rank.

There should be an increase in the coast artillery force so that our coast fortifications can be in some degree adequately manned. There is special need for an increase and reorganization of the medical department of the army. In both the army and navy there must be the same thorough training for duty in the staff corps as in the fighting line. The importance of this was shown conclusively in the Spanish-American and the Russo-Japanese wars. The work of the medical departments in the Japanese army and navy is especially worthy of study.

Our navy must, relatively to the navies of other nations, always be of greater size than our army. We have most wisely continued for a number of years to build up our navy, and it has now reached a fairly high standard of efficiency. This standard must not only be maintained, but increased. It does not seem to me necessary, however, that the navy should, at least in the immediate future, be increased beyond the present number of units. What is now clearly necessary is to substitute efficient for inefficient units as the latter become worn out or as it becomes apparent that they are useless. Probably the result would be attained by adding a single battleship to our navy each year, the superseded or outworn vessels being laid up or broken up as they are thus replaced.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S message to Congress, on pages 4 and 7, is worthy of careful perusal and deserving of the closest attention of our readers.

ELECTRIC RAILWAY FRANCHISE.

There was a joint meeting of the Common Council and Board of Public Works last night to consider the advisability of granting a trolley franchise to the Syracuse & Northern Street Railway Company. Mr. Lux, who represents the company, was present, and intimated that they expected a perpetual franchise. This is, without doubt, the most vital question at issue.

Experience counsels extreme caution in granting such a privilege. Nothing but a short-term franchise should be granted in any event. No Board or Council has any right to barter the future growth of the city for any consideration whatever. What appear to be generous concessions to-day may be intolerable burdens in twenty years' time. However careful and prudent the city officers may be, they are no match for the corporation seeking the franchise, and must, almost of neces sity, make some errors.

With a short-term franchise the city is able to extricate itself before irreparable damage is done.

There are many other points deserving careful consideration, but this one item—the life of the franchise—is the most important of all. Let everybody interested in the city's welfare attend the public hearing on Thursday, Dec. 14, and insist on a short-time franchise.

Miss Helen Parminter was called to Owego on Wednesday by the critical illness of her mother, who had been in a hospital for several weeks. On Monday she died, and while none of the funeral arrangements are yet known in this city, it is probable that the funeral and burial took place in Owego today. Miss Parminter's many friends in this city extend sincere sympathy to her in her bereavement which leaves her practically without a near relative in the world. The Rev. A. H. Grant and Miss Jessie Bradley will attend the funeral.

The Times is in receipt of the following announcement from Manager Wallace of The Richardson and as it is an unusual treat for Fultonians, undoubtly a large crowd will respond: "We have next week at the Richardson Theatre on Tuesday evening Blanche Bates in "The Darling of the Gods," one of Belasco's biggest productions. On Thursday we have Henrietta Crosman in her latest success "Mary, Mary Quite Contrary." Each of these productions require two carloads of scenery and there are over forty people in each company. I have concluded to run a train for one of the attractions from Fulton, providing I receive sufficient encouragement from Fulton patrons, but as I do not know which attraction would be most desired, I would suggest that all who wish to see one or the other of the attractions would leave their name at Watson's drug store, stating the number of tickets they desire and naming the attraction that they prefer the special train run for. All names must be left before Friday evening of this week as the chart for "The Darling of the Gods" opens Saturday afternoon."

Great Alteration Sale

Beginning Saturday, December 9, preparatory to a general overhauling and enlarging of the entire store. Some departments to be closed out, others enlarged, others moved, a large amount of carpentry and masonry work done, in fact the entire store will be changed and improved beyond recognition. At least one-half the stock must be disposed of before these improvements are begun as it would be almost impossible for the work to be done in the present condition of the store. Prices will be greatly reduced throughout the store and this in the face of the rise in price of both cotton and woolen goods. This will be an unusual opportunity to supply all needs in our line as the goods must be sold, and sold soon.

Wordsworth's "Joke."

A rare old book, called "The Living Authors of England," published in 1846, commences with a study of Wordsworth, in which is recorded what is said to be the only joke the poet ever made. At a friend's house after dinner, it appears, the conversation turned upon wit and humor. Thomas Moore, who was present, told some anecdotes of Sheridan, whereupon Wordsworth observed that he did not consider himself a witty poet. "Indeed," he said, "I do not think I was ever witty but once in my life."

Being pressed to tell the company what this special drollery was, the poet said, with some hesitation: "Well, I will tell you. I was standing some time ago at the entrance of my cottage at Rydal Mount when a man accosted me with the question, 'Pray, sir, have you seen my wife pass by?' whereupon I answered, 'Why, my good friend, I didn't know till this moment that you had a wife!'"

The company stared and upon realizing that this was all there was to the poet's joke burst into a roar of laughter, which Wordsworth smilingly accepted as a genuine compliment to the brilliancy of his wit.—Harper's Weekly.

He Had References.

In her book "A Southern Girl In '61" Mrs. D. Giraud Wright tells a capital story about General John C. Breckinridge of Kentucky. He was invited by a certain lady of rank in London to luncheon. The lady had just advertised for a footman. Mistaking the hour, General Breckinridge reached the house before the appointed time and by some accident was ushered into Lady Blank's presence without being announced. The day was in June. Owing to the heat the blinds were drawn, letting in subdued light. Lady Blank, glancing at the advancing figure, to the astonishment of the visitor, greeted him thus: "Have you a reference from your last place?" The general took in the situation instantly and, with a twinkle in his eye, unobserved by the hostess, answered respectfully, "Yes, my lady." "What were your duties?" was the next query. "Well, my lady, in the last three places I held I was vice president of the United States, major general in the Confederate army and secretary of war of the Confederate States of America."

Naturalization.

On this subject I recommend:

First.—A federal bureau of naturalization, to be established in the department of commerce and labor, to supervise the administration of the naturalization laws and to receive returns of naturalizations pending and accomplished.

Second.—Uniformity of naturalization certificates, fees to be charged, and procedure.

Third.—More exacting qualifications for citizenship.

Fourth.—The preliminary declaration of intention to be abolished and no alien to be naturalized until at least ninety days after the filing of his petition.

Fifth.—Jurisdiction to naturalize aliens to be confined to United States district courts and to such state courts as have jurisdiction in civil actions in which the amount in controversy is unlimited; in cities of over 100,000 inhabitants the United States district courts to have exclusive jurisdiction in the naturalization of the alien residents of such cities.

Criminal Laws.

In my last message I asked the attention of the congress to the urgent need of action to make our criminal law more effective, and I most earnestly request that you pay heed to the report of the attorney general on this subject.

There seems to be no statute of the United States which provides for the punishment of a United States attorney or other officer of the government who corruptly agrees to wrongfully do or wrongfully refrain from doing any act when the consideration for such corrupt agreement is other than one possessing money value. This ought to be remedied by appropriate legislation. Legislation should also be enacted to cover explicitly, unequivocally and beyond question breach of trust in the shape of prematurely divulging official secrets by an officer or employee of the United States and to provide a suitable penalty therefor.

Merchant Marine.

To the spread of our trade in peace and the defense of our flag in war a great and prosperous merchant marine is indispensable. We should have ships of our own and seamen of our own to convey our goods to neutral markets and in case of need to re-enforce our battle line. It cannot but be a source of regret and uneasiness to us that the lines of communication with our sister republics of South America should be chiefly under foreign control. It is not a good thing that American merchants and manufacturers should have to send their goods and letters to South America via Europe if they wish security and dispatch. Even on the Pacific, where our ships have held their own better than on the Atlantic, our merchant flag is now threatened through the liberal aid bestowed by other governments on their own steam lines. I ask your earnest consideration of the report with which the merchant marine commission has followed its long and careful inquiry.

It is a matter of unmixed satisfaction once more to call attention to the excellent work of the pension bureau, for the veterans of the civil war have a greater claim upon us than any other class of our citizens. To them first of all among our people honor is due.

Immigration.

As I said in my last message to the congress, we cannot have too much immigration of the right sort, and we should have none whatever of the wrong sort.

The questions arising in connection with Chinese immigration stand by themselves. The conditions in China are such that the entire Chinese cooly class—that is, the class of Chinese laborers, skilled and unskilled—legitimately come under the head of undesirable immigrants to this country. But in the effort to carry out the policy of excluding Chinese laborers, Chinese coolies, grave injustice and wrong have been done by this nation to the people of China and therefore ultimately to this nation itself. Chinese students, business and professional men of all kinds, not only merchants, but bankers, doctors, manufacturers, professors, travelers and the like, should be encouraged to come here and treated on precisely the same footing that we treat students, business men, travelers and the like of other nations.

As a people we have talked much of the open door in China, and we expect, and quite rightly intend to insist upon, justice being shown us by the Chinese. But we cannot expect to receive equity unless we do equity.

The Civil Service.

Heads of executive departments and members of the commission have called my attention to the fact that the rule requiring a filing of charges and three days' notice before an employee could be separated from the service for inefficiency has served no good purpose whatever. Experience has shown that the rule is wholly ineffective to save any man if a superior for improper reasons wishes to remove him and is mischievous because it sometimes serves to keep in the service incompetent men not guilty of specific wrongdoing. Having these facts in view, the rule has been amended by providing that where the inefficiency or incapacity comes within the personal knowledge of the head of a department the removal may be made without notice, the reasons therefor being filed and made a record of the department. The absolute right of removal rests where it always has rested, with the head of the department. The ...

Our copyright laws need revision. Philippines and Other Islands.

During the last year the Philippine Islands have been slowly recovering from the series of disasters which since American occupation have greatly reduced the amount of agricultural products below what was produced in Spanish times.

The agricultural conditions of the islands enforce more strongly than ever the argument in favor of reducing the tariff on the products of the Philippine Islands entering the United States. I earnestly recommend that the tariff now imposed by the Dingley bill upon the products of the Philippine Islands be entirely removed, except the tariff on sugar and tobacco, and that that tariff be reduced to 25 per cent of the present rates under the Dingley act; that after July 1, 1909, the tariff upon tobacco and sugar produced in the Philippine Islands be entirely removed and that free trade between the islands and the United States in the products of each country then be provided for by law.

In my judgment, immediate steps should be taken for the fortification of Hawaii. This is the most important point in the Pacific to fortify in order to conserve the interests of this country. It would be hard to overstate the importance of this need. Hawaii is too heavily taxed. Laws should be enacted setting aside for a period of, say, twenty years 75 per cent of the internal revenue and customs receipts from Hawaii as a special fund to be expended in the islands.

I earnestly advocate the adoption of legislation which will explicitly confer American citizenship on all citizens of Porto Rico.

I wish also to call the attention of the congress to one question which affects our insular possessions generally—namely, the need of an increased liberality in the treatment of the whole franchise question in these islands.

I earnestly ask that Alaska be given an elective delegate.

Admission to Statehood.

I recommend that Indian Territory and Oklahoma be admitted as one state and that New Mexico and Arizona be admitted as one state.

The Panama Canal.

Active work in canal construction, mainly preparatory, has been in progress for less than a year and a half. During that period two points about the canal have ceased to be open to debate. First, the question of route; second, the question of feasibility. The point which remains unsettled is whether the canal shall be one of several locks above sea level or at sea level with a single tide lock. On this point I hope to lay before the congress at an early day the findings of the advisory board of American and European engineers.

In addition to sanitating the isthmus, satisfactory quarters are being provided for employees and an adequate system of supplying them with wholesome food at reasonable prices has been created. Hospitals have been established and equipped that are without superiors of their kind anywhere. During the past year a large portion of the plant with which the work is to be done has been ordered. It is confidently believed that by the middle of the approaching year a sufficient proportion of this plant will have been installed to enable us to resume the work of excavation on a large scale.

What is needed now and without delay is an appropriation by the congress to meet the current and accruing expenses of the commission. The first appropriation of $10,000,000 out of the $135,000,000 authorized by the Spooner act was made three years ago. It is nearly exhausted. Unless the congress shall appropriate before that time all work must cease.

[In conclusion the president recommends an increase in the diplomatic and consular service and more adequate compensation of its members.]

Charcoal.

Charcoal is one of the greatest purifiers of water that we have. Water or any substance allowed to percolate through it will be freed of all animal organisms or foreign particles. It is one of the best sweeteners of the breath. After a hearty meal it is a splendid thing for the stomach if added to it is a little ginger. It is excellent with which to cleanse the teeth, for it removes fungous growth that many tooth powders fail to touch. It relieves pain caused by a burn.

Expert Dyers.

The Tyrians, it is claimed, were the most expert dyers of ancient times. The fabrics dyed with the famous tyrian purple did not assume their proper color until after two days' exposure to the light and air. During this time they passed through a gradation of shades of yellow, green, blue, violet and red, which the dyers understood how to arrest and fix at any moment.

Hitchcock and the Land Frauds

BINGER HERMANN.

THERE has seldom arisen in the history of the United States a scandal that has involved so many politicians as that of the western land frauds. In the battle against thieves and grafters who sought to enrich themselves at the expense of Uncle Sam the leader of the combat from first to last has been the aggressive and fearless secretary of the interior, Ethan Allen Hitchcock of Missouri. A battle of this kind is very hard to fight because those under suspicion always have influential friends who seek to exert political pressure against a full and free examination into the subject. It is charged that the people of the United States have been cheated out of thousands of acres of land, valued at millions of dollars, by the crooked schemes concocted by men organized to perpetrate wholesale frauds.

These frauds have been going on for years, but they at last reached a pass where herculean efforts were plainly necessary to stop them, and Secretary Hitchcock proved the man for the task. Stealing government land had become such a common and apparently respectable offense that there was danger lest the public become entirely oblivious of the immorality of the act. As a result of the campaign against land frauds a United States senator, John H. Mitchell, and a congressman, John N. Williamson, have been tried and convicted in Oregon, and another Oregon congressman, Binger Hermann, is under indictment. Indictments against other leading politicians in Oregon have been found. Twenty-seven men have been indicted for land frauds in Idaho, and several indictments for similar offenses have been found in California. In Nebraska, South Dakota and Kansas the secretary of the interior is engaged in prosecuting politicians and others for violating the fencing laws.

Something of the spirit that dominated the ancestor for whom he was named animates the quiet but determined business man at the head of the interior department. He is a great-grandson of Colonel Ethan Allen of Revolutionary fame, the hero who commanded the Green Mountain boys, and who captured Fort Ticonderoga "in the name of the great Jehovah and of the Continental congress." Lucy Allen, daughter of the Vermont hero, married Judge Samuel Hitchcock, one of the foremost men of New England in his day, and their son Henry moved from New England to Alabama, where he practiced law and rose to the position of chief justice of the supreme bench of the state. He was the father of the present secretary of the interior, who was born in Mobile in 1835. He has been described as "an Anglo-Saxon of Vermont parentage and Alabama birth, a Yankee and a southerner, born of a northern father and a southern mother, a business man of Missouri who believed in Lincoln, Grant and Sherman."

ETHAN ALLEN HITCHCOCK.

During his boyhood Secretary Hitchcock lived in Alabama, Louisiana, Tennessee and Missouri and in 1880 went to China to engage in business, remaining there twelve years. On his return to Missouri he became identified with large manufacturing enterprises and amassed a considerable fortune. President McKinley appointed him minister to Russia, and, as the legation at St. Petersburg was raised to the status of an embassy shortly after he arrived at his post, he became the first American ambassador to the court of the czar. Mr. McKinley invited him in 1899 to take a seat in his cabinet as head of the interior department, and President Roosevelt has continued him in office and gives him hearty support in the war against the land grabbers.

When Secretary Hitchcock assumed his present post he found at the head of the land office, an important branch of his department, Binger Hermann of Oregon. Mr. Hermann was born in Maryland in 1843 and removed to Oregon as a young man and took up the practice of law. He served in the Oregon legislature and was elected to congress and was serving his sixth term when Mr. McKinley, in 1897, appointed him commissioner general of the land

When Lincoln Had Few Friends.

In 1864 Lincoln was of all men the least commended by the Republicans in congress. On one occasion an editor visiting Washington asked Senator Thaddeus Stevens to introduce him to some members of congress who were favorable to Lincoln's re-election. Stevens led him to the desk of Mr. Arnold of Illinois. "There," said he, "is the only Lincoln member of congress that I know!" Stevens himself regarded Lincoln as incompetent and weak. Henry Wilson (afterward vice president) spoke of him as politically a failure. Greeley had a low opinion of his ability. His personal friends, such as Washburn, Raymond and Thurlow Weed, believed his re-election an impossibility. Even Lincoln himself at one time doubted it.—H. T. Peck in Bookman.

The Lord's Prayer.

The question having arisen as to whether the English version of the Lord's Prayer is a true reproduction of the original as found in Matthew, a native Greek scholar proceeds to answer it. He deals with the petitions in order, translates each word with all the shades of meaning of the original and then presents the whole in this form:

"Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name—thy dominion come—thy (fixed) purpose be done, as in heaven, so, too, on earth. Give us this day our mere (or simple) bread and forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors theirs, and let us not fall into a tempter's snare, but deliver us from the evil one."

Very Lively.

A London paper relates that a crowd of sightseers scurrying across the road from the Strand caused a partial block in the traffic. The lagging of a particularly pompous old gentleman roused the ire of a held up cabby. "Now, then, hurry up there, can't yer?" he shouted.

"Am I not hurrying, cabman?" was the mild expostulation.

"'Urryin'?" snorted cabby, with a flick of his whip. "You're a-jumpin' about like a bit o' stickin' plaster!"

Quite a Feat.

Judge—Who bit your ear off? Mrs. Black (wishing to protect her husband)—I—I did it mahself.—Exchange.

First Treaty of Portsmouth.

The first treaty of Portsmouth, N. H., was signed July 11, 1713, the contracting parties being belligerent Indians and the whites. Delaware's Hundreds.

In the days when the Saxons dominated England prior to the coming of William of Normandy the people were formed into divisions of hundreds. This was done mainly for military purposes and the convenience of assembly upon the summons of the powerful earls and barons to whom the people owed allegiance. These hundreds usually consisted of ten families, each family being computed at a minimum of ten persons. In time the families increased in membership, but did not lose their individual identity or change the designation of organization. In the natural order of events these hundreds expanded into communities and ultimately into geographical divisions and took on geographical designations. Some of the American colonists adopted this form of geographical division, and thus we still have hundreds in Delaware and Virginia, although in the latter state that form of designation is but seldom used. But in Delaware hundred is universally used to describe the divisions of a county and is equivalent to the township in other states.

Grip Quickly Knocked Out.

"Some weeks ago during the severe winter weather both my wife and myself contracted severe colds which speedily developed into the worst kind of la grippe with all its miserable symptoms," says Mr. J. S. Egleston of Maple Landing, Iowa. "Knees and joints aching, muscles sore, head stopped up, eyes and nose running, with alternate spells of chills and fever. We began using Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, aiding the same with a dose of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets, and by its liberal use soon completely knocked out the grip."

It is a good plan to take a dose of the Tablets when you have a cold. They promote a healthy action of the bowels, liver and kidneys which is always beneficial when the system is congested by a cold or attack of the grip. For sale by H. C. Giesler.

The Office Dignified.

A Greek named Epaminondas was condemned by his enemies to fill an office much beneath him, which consisted in cleaning the streets and clearing away refuse. He declared that he would make them see that not only does the task show what the man is, but also the man shows what the task is, and he raised the office to a great dignity, teaching that no honest work need degrade the worker, but an honest worker can dignify the work.

Give Your Stomach Rest.

Nothing will cure indigestion that doesn't digest the food, itself, and give the stomach rest. You can't expect that a weak stomach will regain its strength and get well when it is compelled to do the full work that a sound stomach should do. You wouldn't expect a sick horse to get well when it is compelled to do a full day's work every day of the week. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure is a perfect digestant and digests the food regardless of the condition of your stomach disorders. J. O. Sether, traveling salesman, Crookston, Minn., says: "I have used Kodol Dyspepsia Cure for a period of nine months, and am cured of Dyspepsia." Sold by H. C. Giesler and G. T. Boyington.

She Paid on the Investment.

"Here," complained the aggrieved father, "I have spent nearly $15,000 on that girl's education, and now she goes and marries a $2,500 a year clerk."

"Well," said the friend of the family, "isn't that all of 15 per cent on your investment? What more do you want?"

Aims of a higher order, even though they be not fulfilled, are in themselves more valuable than lower ones entirely fulfilled.—Goethe.

Venus Shows Her Sex.

The only planet which the Incas had discovered was Venus, which they called the lucky. An account of the brightness of its rays. They said that, being the most brilliant of the stars, the sun would not permit it to be separated from him and obliged it to attend his rising as well as his going down, just as at the courts of kings only the most distinguished lords and the handsomest ladies were admitted to the ceremonious royal risings and retirings. It appears nearly certain that the Incas spoke of Venus under two different names, according as it preceded or followed the sun. To this day the native Peruvians pause it in fanciful language the eight hour torch and the twilight lamp. As this star served to show the Indians when it was time to prepare the maize for cooking, they also gave it a name indicative of that act. A chapel in the Temple of the Sun was consecrated to this planet.

Pain in the Back.

The pain of a cold settled in the back part of the chest in the lung and consist of a number of vascular membranes, which are generally arranged in double, fringelike rows, attached to the parts by the base only. In some cases these membranes are feather shaped, in others mere folds attached to the sides of the gill cavities. The fish is a cold blooded animal—that is to say, its temperature is seldom more than a degree or two higher than the water in which it lives. This being true, the creature needs but a very small amount of oxygen to keep the blood at a temperature sufficiently high to sustain life. This oxygen is supplied to the blood of the fish by respiring large quantities of water, or, rather, drinking large quantities of water, and respiring the air separated from it by the gills. This explains why a fish cannot live in a tank of water which has been sifted through the gills time and time again any better than a human being or other animal can in air that has been deprived of all its oxygen by being taken into lungs and expelled without being aerated. Fish that die in the stale water of aquariums may be properly said to drown, because they perish for want of air, the same thing which occasions death by drowning in man and other lung breathing animals.

The Fate of Flies.

Some light on the fate of flies was thrown by H. Hill in a lecture at the Royal Victoria hall, London, on "Flies and How They Disappear." In England alone there are 3,000 different kinds of flies, and Mr. Hill mentioned the following principal ways in which flies perish: They are drowned in milk at the breakfast table; they get surrounded by a white fungus, which saps their strength; they are eaten by spiders, wasps, frogs, chameleons, lizards, field mice or fish.

With so many enemies it might be wondered how flies have continued to exist, but Mr. Hill said that he had himself witnessed a daddy longlegs whose front half was being devoured by a spider continuing calmly to lay eggs with the other half, as though nothing were happening.

to become famous for the number of its authors in politics. One of these is the mayor elect of Toledo, Brand Whitlock, who in aiding Mayor Tom Johnson to round up the reform sentiment of the Buckeye State in the conference of mayors elect called at Cleveland Mr. Whitlock is the author of "The Thirteenth District," "Her Infinite Variety" and other stories, and he is the man upon whom the mantle of "Golden Rule" Jones has fallen. He was born at Urbana in 1869 and is the son of a minister, the Rev. Elias D. Whitlock. He studied law at Springfield, Ill., and there got an insight into politics. The political atmosphere in which he found himself at the Illinois state capital was responsible for his turning aside from the practice of law upon his entrance to the bar and engaging in newspaper work instead, in which he won a reputation as a writer on political subjects. He took up story writing in connection with journalism, and it was in this way that he brought out in 1901 his most famous work, "The Thirteenth District," a stirring novel of politics.

A few years ago Mr. Whitlock entered upon the practice of the legal profession in Toledo. His interest in the kind of politics represented by the late Mayor Samuel M. Jones led him to support that successful reformer with enthusiasm. He was one of the most trusted friends of the "Golden Rule mayor." When the latter died the corporation and machine politicians supposed that the rule of the Golden Rule in Toledo was at an end, and stocks of public service corporations took a boom. But Toledo had learned well the lessons taught by the dead mayor, and in the last election the novel writing lawyer, who had been nominated on a Golden Rule platform, rallied the independents to his support and was swept into office by a large majority.

MISS CARL AND TSI AN.

American Young Woman Who Painted Empress Dowager of China.

Miss Katherine Carl, whose book "With the Empress Dowager" has just been issued by the Century company, is an American artist formerly resident in Paris, but now the tenant of a New York studio. She won special fame through her portraits of the Chinese dowager empress, Tsi An, and was for eleven months a resident of the imperial palace in Peking. It was in this way she came to obtain the knowledge of Chinese customs and character and of the imperial family which she has embodied in her book. Miss Carl was born in New Orleans, spent her early years in Memphis and eighteen years ago accompanied her mother to Paris, where she studied under the best artists.

Several years ago Miss Carl went to China to visit a brother. She met

MISS KATHERINE CARL.

Colonel Edwin H. Conger, then the American minister, and his wife, and they introduced her to the dowager empress, who had learned of her remarkable artistic gifts and decided to sit to her for a portrait. The artist during her residence in the palace was attended by a large retinue of servants, and for almost a year Tsi An gave her a sitting nearly every day. She painted several pictures of the iron willed old lady who is the real ruler of China, and one of them showed the dowager empress in costume of state and sitting upon the throne. This was sent to the St. Louis fair.

A Wonderful Bed.

A very costly bed was built in Bombay for a native ruler some years ago. At the four corners were full sized figures of Grecian maidens, the ones at the top holding stringed instruments, while those at the foot bore in their hands huge fans. Extending the full length of the bed was a music box capable of playing for half an hour before the repertory of tune was exhausted. The weight of the body set this music box in motion, while at the same time the figures at the head of the bed fingered the strings of their instruments, while those at the foot waved their fans. A concealed motor furnishing the power that kept the fans going all night long.

Why Men Wear Mustaches.

The Gaulois of Paris has been investigating that grave question, "Why men wear mustaches?" Some men answered the question by replied that it was too much trouble to shave, one declared that it saved his teeth, another that his upper lip without it, gave him a bad cold, and three that it avoided wrinkles. Two others maintained that it kept the air they breathed, and another was of the opinion that a mustache was necessary to health. INTERESTING HISTORY

W. C. T. U. of Fulton Indulge in Pleasant Reminiscences Embracing a Period of Fifteen Years.

[Paper Written and Read by Mrs. C. W. Streeter at the Fifteenth Anniversary, held on Friday, Nov. 17, in the Baptist Church.]

I am sure I voice the feelings of many present in the next few lines:

"Dear Sisters: I want right here again to thank you for those beautiful carnations you sent me when I was one of the shut-ins. No other flowers ever seemed just like those to me, and every time my eyes rested on them they comforted me with their message of your love and tender thoughtfulness of me, and their memory lingers still."

We send flowers to our living sisters when sickness or sorrow comes into their lives. We place them tenderly on the caskets of our dead, and now, like the veterans, we put them reverently on the graves of our comrades.

Convinced that we should seize every opportunity to bring the subject of temperance before the public, we have each year had some reminder at the Oswego County Fair. Several times we had a tent, sold light lunches and gave away literature. A temperance barrel has also been kept supplied with ice water.

An important factor always is the mothers' meetings. The first one at a regular W. C. T. U. gathering, Feb. 15, '82, was addressed by Mrs. Van Doren of Phoenix. Later, Mrs. James of Syracuse gave a series of lectures on the "Mother play," and regular monthly mothers' meetings resulted. These afterward alternated with the union, and now one union meeting a year is devoted to the mothers. At one time a mothers' library of twenty volumes was circulated among the members. The superintendents were Mrs. Loomis, Mrs. Townsend, Mrs. Platt and now Mrs. John Richards.

In Jan., 1892, the Loyal Temperance Legion was organized, soon numbering 200 members, who studied, once in two weeks, a temperance manual with lessons prepared similarly to that used in the S. S. This taxed all our resources in teachers, rooms, and strength; but seed was then sown that is bearing fruit to-day. To meet the financial need, a temperance entertainment, in which 200 children took part, was given in the Opera House. The play represented the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, with its many departments, as the Old Woman who lived in a shoe. The $117.30 realized from it was not the only or most vital result. The town was carried for no-license a few days later. Who shall say the children had no part in this?

Believing the pen is mightier than the sword, we have fought this foe of the home with literature. It has been one of our most trusted weapons against the hated evil. Not only have thousands of pages been distributed every time the question of no-license has been before the voters, 7334 leaflets being used in one campaign alone, but at all times and in all places we have sought by the use of well selected literature, to put the matter of right doing and right living before the people. Laws against cigarettes were posted in school buildings and many public places. Wall pockets, (ten in number) were put in depots, prominent offices and other convenient places, for temperance leaflets. One member distributed literature along the canal from Buffalo to Albany. In November, 1898, the Physiology Journal was sent for 6 months to three principals of our public schools. The Legion Library, the Life of Madam Willard, and Glimpses of Fifty Years, were presented to the public library, and The Union Signal, the national paper, was kept on file there for years. In 1901, 100 copies of the world's number of the Signal were given away, and this paper has had some subscribers here each year.

From 25 to 72 copies a year of the State paper—Women's Temperance Work—are taken. Two barrels of reading have been sent to the Sailors' Home in Massachusetts.

For two years the press superintendent furnished at least a part of a column every week to each of our village papers. So few words tell of work that took weeks for its accomplishment. From the beginning, our editors have been uniformly courteous in inserting notices and reports of our meetings and all temperance news we have furnished them. We are pleased to take this opportunity to give credit where it is due.

Our efforts for good have never been confined to our own town. Numerous petitions have been circulated and sent to Albany and Washington to influence our law makers for the right. A petition to our Assemblyman and one to our Senator, asking them to vote against making the laws less stringent for the protection of our girls, had 215 Fulton names signed. The polyglot petition to the heads of the nations of the world, asking for temperance laws, had 715 Fulton names among the 7,000,000. One was sent to Albany against Sunday liquor selling, another for an anti-treating law. One went to our Senator Stranahan and to our Assemblyman against repealing the Scientific Temperance Instruction law. Another to Washington, asking our Congressman to do all in his power against allowing Roberts, the Mormon, to take a seat in Congress. One asked for a curfew law in Fulton. Just a thought in passing: When Mayor Foster asked our corresponding secretary for the names of cities having curfew laws, she gave him 35. A petition was sent to the Pan-American commissioners, urging them

A CHRISTMAS CAROL.

Prof. F. D. Losey of Syracuse University, Will Give His Celebrated Reading from Dickens in First M. E. Church, December 15.

Prof. Frederick D. Losey, of Syracuse University will give his celebrated reading entitled "A Christmas Carol" by Dickens, on Friday evening, December 15, at eight o'clock, at the First Methodist Episcopal church. The entertainment is given under the auspices of the Floral Committee and tickets are now on sale. Evidently a rare treat is in store for a Fulton audience as the following clippings will show:

Mr. Losey is one of the most skillful delineators. To so invest a character with an individuality of its own, as to render it distinct in personality, is difficult at best. To do this without the slightest aid from costuming or scenery, is a task to be accomplished only by the highest grade of talent. That Mr. Losey showed himself capable of doing this speaks higher praise than any general words of eulogy.—Painesville (O.) Journal, March 2, 1893.

An audience composed of some of Concord's best citizens gathered in Baker Memorial Church last evening, to listen to select readings by Mr. F. D. Losey. To say that it was an hour of extreme pleasure and profit to all scarcely expresses it. It was indeed a fine entertainment, being of that high order of merit which always delights and pleases the cultured and refined. His rendition of "Martin Relph" was exceptionally good, and alone amply repaid those who left comfortable rooms on a cold winter night.—Concord (N. H.) Evening Monitor.

An Erroneous Statement.

This morning's Post-Standard contained the announcement that the list of candidates for the office of postmaster in this city had dwindled to two, viz.: W. F. Hill and F. M. Cornell. This is an inexcusable error on the part of the Fulton correspondent. Mr. Aaces Youmans, the present incumbent, is desirous of reappointment. The other candidates are W. E. Hughes, B. W. Bennett, R. D. Parsons, F. A. Gage, and more to follow.

Notice of Removal.

On and after Dec. 14, the Times office will be located in the Miller block, No. 66 South First street, nearly opposite the City Hall, a lease for a long term of years having been executed.

Political Equality Club.

The members of the Fulton Political Equality Club met last Thursday afternoon at the pleasant home of the president, Mrs. H. N. Gilbert, to listen to a report of the State Suffragist Convention by the vice-president, Miss Harriet May Mills. The meeting opened with a piano solo by Miss Barbara Gilbert, rendered in a faultless manner. Remarks were made by State Corresponding Secretary, Miss Alice Williams, which were well received. Miss Mills was then introduced and delighted all present with her convincing argument and unbounded faith in the final outcome. The report follows in part: The thirty-seventh annual convention of the New York State Suffragists was held at Rochester, Oct. 24-27. This convention exceeded all previous records, there being 136 voting delegates present, with visitors and friends from the city in addition. The presence of Miss Susan B. Anthony and the national president, the Rev. Anna H. Shaw, gave constant inspiration. Mrs. Crossett, the presiding officer, compared the convention held in Rochester in 1890, when there were seven clubs in the State, to this one, representing 100 local and 31 county clubs. Mrs. Haley, enrollment chairman, gave a total of 14,049 names enrolled. Mrs. Laura E. Taylor of Denver spoke of the effects of woman suffrage in her State. Statistics were given to prove the success of equal suffrage in Wyoming, Utah and Idaho. Miss Mills was repeatedly applauded while giving the foregoing report.

Mrs. Gilbert's parlors were filled with an appreciative audience. After the meeting dainty refreshments were served and a social hour followed.

County Court.

The third week of County court is in session in Pulaski, Judge Stowell presiding. The trial of the people against Salvatore Camella, for murder in the second degree, will occupy the court this week.

Upon motion of Special County Judge Freelon J. Davis of Pulaski the case of the people against Castle H. Gardner, indicted for attempting to destroy a public bridge at Phoenix, was put over the term. District-Attorney William B. Baker of Oswego, who was ready to try the case, opposed the motion, and the putting of this over made it necessary, the District-Attorney stated, to take similar action in the case of the people against Jacob McNeil, who was indicted under the same charge, and the case went over. Other cases put over the term on Monday were: The People vs. William Taylor, charged with abduction; the people vs Irving Howe, charged with abandoning a child under 14 years of age.

to close the exposition on Sunday. Resolutions signed by our Sunday Schools were sent by the Union to the National Sunday School convention in Denver asking that the quarterly temperance lesson be continued in use. In July, '97, a petition was circulated and presented to our village officers that a fountain be so built as to accommodate people as well as animals. A letter was sent Gov. Roosevelt thanking him for his woman's suffrage sentiment and one of commendation to Editor Hughes for his position on the temperance question during a no-license campaign, also one to Chief of Police Ross commending his efforts for the suppression of vice. One of the most helpful lines of work, because it promises the most for the future, is our Y branch, organized in 1900, by Mrs. Leberry, State temperance superintendent. Three union ladies have in turn had the oversight of this department—Mrs. McClellan, Mrs. Platt and Mrs. Schafer. The presidents are: Miss Eleanor McCully, 2 years; Dora Harding, 1 year, and Dora Barker, who is just entering her second year. The largest membership, 110, was attained by the Y's in 1902, when they received a beautiful chocolate pot, the State prize for increase in membership.

Like the Union, the Y's have been seeking a permanent home, but have not yet secured one. Their semi-monthly meetings have sometimes been in Grace Mission Chapel, but generally in the homes, the members receiving notice by topic cards of place and leader. For two years the young men have outnumbered the young ladies in attendance. The important feature at each gathering is a temperance program; the attraction of the evening, the social hour. A banquet followed both membership contests and forms a part of every annual meeting. The Y's have given the city newsboys three banquets, and last year a Christmas tree to the Mission. Hallow'en and St. Valentine's day have always received proper attention. Their next work is the making of comfort bags for sailors. If you desire a more intimate acquaintance with our Y's, invite them to your home. I know of no way to spend a more delightful evening—one more inspiring more wholesome, more uplifting.

Time will not permit more than a mention of the numberless teas, parlor meetings, receptions and other social functions. The hospital benefit when $70 was realized; the rummage sale when $77 was cleared; the bake-stuff sale clearing $17 45; the white ribbon tea in the town hall bringing $16; and one in the same place when 200 guests were served and $32 raised for the Anchorage in Elmira, which in addition to this has received regularly $5 every year during the effort to save the Temple in Chicago for temperance, and we must entirely omit dozens of other good causes that have been helped. I will just allude to the pinning on of the white ribbons when forgetful members have left their's at home.

In the fifteen years we have welcomed many County, State and National officials. Mrs. A. A. Maltby and Mrs. S. M. Parker, county presidents; Mrs. F. Van Duzee, county [illegible] secretary; Mrs. Frobisher W. Gamble, State corresponding secretary; Mrs. G. M. Chamberlin, State recording secretary; Mrs. Vinnie R. Davis State superintendent of franchise; Mrs. Georgia Hewitt, State organizer; Mrs. Mary T. Burt and Mrs. Ella A. Boole, State presidents; Mrs. E. R. Willis, State parliamentarian; Mrs. Mary J. Weaver, State evangelist; Mrs. Leberry State, superintendent temperance work; Miss Decker Florence, Crittenden Mission, N. Y.; Mrs. Louise L. Rounds and Mrs. Helen L. Bullock National organizers; Mrs. Mary F. Lathrop and Miss Belle Kearney, National speakers; Mrs. Susan S. Fessenden and Mrs. Emily U. Burgess, National organizers; Miss Schenck from Bulgaria.

Some one has said "the Woman's Christian Temperance Union seeks out the saints and tells us of them." May we not add that it has been our delight to honor them. In '97 the names of Mrs. C. G. Case, our Auntie Case, and Mrs. S. A. Weed, were sent to the memorial column of the State paper. In '98 a parlor memorial meeting was held for Mrs. Mary T. Burt, State president. Once we observed Crusade day. In '98 a memorial for Mary Clement Leavitt, one of the world's W. C. T. U. missionaries, of whom there are seven; Jessie Ackerman, one of the brightest, being a Baptist. In March, '97, a public meeting was held in honor of Neal Dow. Every year one meeting takes the form of a memorial to Frances Willard, world's president, and in '98, just after her home going, nine churches united in her memorial service, in the Presbyterian church by invitation of Rev. J. H. Odell. The church was beautifully decorated with flowers and white ribbons, with the flag draped around her picture. The address was given by the State President, Mary T. Burt.

We have written this outline thus minutely that we might gain new courage for the future and may Frances Willard's words at the National convention of 1884 be our inspiration: "God has set the Woman's Christian Temperance Union for a grander confession and defense of the faith than we have dreamed as yet; one which would blanch our cheeks perhaps and make our hearts heavy with fear could we to-day know all that is involved. But if we are true and tender-hearted, holding fast the hand of Christ, we shall be equal to the emergencies as they arise, no matter how perilous or great. Let me give you Dr. Bonnevillo's words for a motto: 'Make your a pleasure and a privilege.' If the burden becomes to be outward and with courage and in a spirit of self-sacrifice.'"

The Christmas American Boy.

The December American Boy is replete with all the enjoyable reading matter that the boys demand at this holiday season. There are the concluding chapters of Mr. Hawkes' splendid animal story, The Tripod Fox, and of My Four Years at West Point, the latter of which has fired many boys with patriotic fervor. Mr. Lisenbee's story, The Joy Claim, is continued, and the editor gives another of his boyhood experiences in Hank and the Walnuts. A Boy's Christmas Gift tells how one boy brought Christmas joy to a friendless little girl. When the Dyke went Down is the story of a Canadian boy's rescue from drowning by a cow. In The Prize Offer Frank H. Sweet tells of how a boy, altho' confined to his bed by sickness, won a prize. On the Wings of the Wind is a story of the frozen North and relates the pluck and courage of a boy in order to bring assistance to famine-stricken and sick villagers. Geordie is a story of the American soldiers in the Philippines and tells how a pet mongoose saved the life of one of Uncle Sam's boys from the bite of a cobra serpent. How Jerry Beat the Hunters is a fine story of how a boy killed a bear which a large party of hunters were searching for. In addition there are fine puzzles which will make the boys put on their thinking caps, for the solution of which handsome rewards are given. There are 83 illustrations. The subscription price is $1.00 a year. The Sprague Publishing Co., Detroit, Mich.

Daisies Follow Railways.

"Buttercups and daisies follow railroads the world over," said an engineer. "In India, in central Asia, in Brazil, the parallel rails run continually between meadows white and yellow with home flowers. In the construction of all foreign railways American or English engineers have a hand. These men know that good home grass is the best thing for holding together the earth on embankments. Grass is quick and lasting. It strikes root so deeply that it practically cements the whole flimsy earthworks. So grass seed from home is sown on railway embankments all over the world by the home engineers helping to build them, and even in the most tropical places, among the [illegible] orchids and palms and [illegible] cacti, you will see mile after mile of wholesome, clean home grass, starred with white daisies and yellow buttercups."

...MY SANTA CLAUS

HANS RUPPERT WALKS ALL THE WAY FROM RUSSIA.

A Great, Gallant Figure, With Top Boots and Mighty Pack—Christmas Customs of the Fatherland—Presentation on Christmas Eve.

Hans Ruppert is the name of the Santa Claus of Saxony given by the simple, pious peasantry. "Hans Ruppert will arrive tonight!" the children of Saxony cry all along the dear, dark-ening twilight of Christmas eve, as they freshen their little Saxon noses against the cottage window panes, peering out along the winter roads for "our Hans Ruppert." "Hans Ruppert is coming tonight!" say the simple hearted grown up folk to one another, a people who have one evening in the winter twilight of their hard, stern lives when it will be all glow and glamour and froth of fun.

Hans Ruppert comes from Russia, from its silent mysteries of steppe and of snows. But he is not a Slav. Hans Ruppert is not the traditional Santa Claus of the Tenton land—a jolly old man with curly beard and winking smile. "Hans Ruppert is a tall, brawny, peasant looking fellow," say the good Saxony folk with a sublime earnestness as if they had seen him. Hans Ruppert has muscles minted from their own brave life of gray toil. Hans Ruppert walks all the way from afar, from the Asiatic Russland and, at every step he takes toward the Caucasus chain, at every stride up and up, still up the ledges of its rock and bluff and brae, across its brawling streams, now down on the other side of its stern shoulder shadowed in the star calm, at every pace past the Russian villages twinkling through the night mists like sparklets struck off from the czar crown way off there above the Neva, as he foots it grandly—this great, grand, gallant Hans Ruppert—his top boots that at the beginning of the long Christmas march reached only below the knee, grow taller and taller, still higher—until when he hears the Rhein-strom murmur and the golden voice above the Lorelei rock, and at last at the gates of Berlin sees the mighty gleam of the army of the vaterland, the Hans Ruppertish boots are up to the loins, cuirassier fashion, accordion wrinkled and mirror in their mighty polish the very "Sword of My Illustrious Grandfather!" And Hans Ruppert stands a grenadier, one of the sacred bodyguard around an emperor, stands with star on breast and double headed eagle on helmet, stands a mighty ghost to deal death to the foes of vaterland—until next Christmas.

On his back, through all his long trudge tonight, Hans Ruppert carries his pack. It is a pack of good things. Thou hast no Christmas tree within that mighty bundle, Hans! The peasant children have made the tree all ready for Hans in the diligent purchase from their little Saxon pfennige on the market day. Hans Ruppert brings the garments for the Christmas tree. Here in his pack is the Christ child's hair, the gold and silver filigree which Hans will twist across the branches with his own brawny hands. Here are the candles, the Christ child's eyes, and the toys and the gifts, "the blessings that drop from the hands of Baby Jesus."

And now the procession forms at 8 o'clock on Christmas eve to go to see what Hans Ruppert has brought to the little family. The procession begins with grandfather and grandmother, on whose seamed and yellowed cheeks glistens the gentle tear of age. Then follow the father and the mother and the unwedded uncles and aunts, and now the children, according to age and size, who are awed in anticipation of "our Hans Ruppert" on the other side of that door toward which the procession is now moving. They stand up on tiptoe and peer behind father's stalwart frame, rebuked by das mutterchen, with a solid Saxon cuff on the unwilling ear, "Ach, mutterchen, it's heilige Nacht!" pleads the father, and mother moderates. Here are the servants of the household, wearing their good Christmas starch of check apron stiffness. How it stands out in its buckram beauty! If it were possible—which the dear Herr Gardener of us all forfend—the apple cheeks of the good house girl glow with a more fruity glisten as she gazes down upon the spheric circumference of starch. The housemaid's smile is laundered, too, and it never leaves her lips until that mysterious door off there is opened by grandfather's trembling old hand, and now some one in the Christmas procession has struck the sweet, resonant, prolonging chords of the zither, and the hymn rises as one "pure concert" along the whole of the household's heart:

O heilige Nacht!
Stille Nacht!

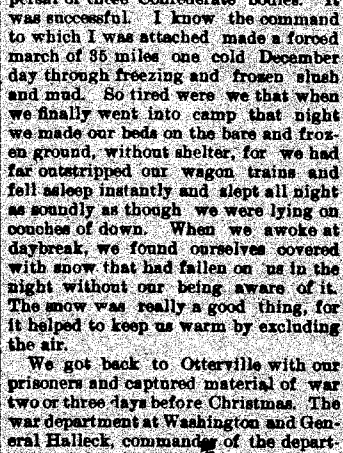
The door is thrown open, and only the stalwart spirits—the Erdgeists who guard the scallops and volutes of the Teutonic verb—can comprehend the meaning and the meaning of the family's exclamations now. Hans Ruppert has done it all! Hans Ruppert has done it all! The tree glistens into gracious charm. It is the aurora of the Divine Child.

And then the good Saxon muscles fall to, and fall, too, on supper. Now, the supper is a sweet feature of this great evening. 1897. For only once a year does the marzipan come round—marzipan, that dear cake, crusted with powdered almonds. Only once a year does "stolen" come round, that dearest cake with raisins—raisins plucked by Hans Ruppert in that faroff mystery—raisins that grew and hadn't anything to do with sour grapes.

But the supper passes, and the night is deepening. The eyes of childhood are drooping. The family rises and again circles the Christmas tree, hand in hand and gazing for the last time on earth. [illegible] the years! May the [illegible] child guard us all!—New [illegible] Advertiser.

CHRISTMAS IN THE ARMY.

General Thomas J. Brady Passed Four of Them at the Front.



CHRISTMAS in the army during the war! Four Christmases found me at the front, but all of them except the first were much like any other day. Notwithstanding I and many of the men of my company—for my rank was then only that of captain—had been in the service since the firing on of Fort Sumter, having served out a three months' term in McClellan's West Virginia campaign and then re-enlisted for three years, or "during the war," Dec. 25, 1861, was the first Christmas to find us in camp, with the enemy not far away.

My regiment was a part of Jeff C. Davis' division and had gone into winter quarters at Otterville, Mo. In December it was learned that large bodies of recruits for Price's army were on their way from northern and western Missouri trying to reach him by Christmas, and that Price had sent a force from his army to act as their escort. About the second week in December a concerted movement was begun which had for its object the capture or dispersal of these Confederate bodies. It was successful. I know the command to which I was attached made a forced march of 35 miles one cold December day through freezing and frozen slush and mud. So tired were we that when we finally went into camp that night we made our beds on the bare and frozen ground, without shelter, for we had far outstripped our wagon trains and fell asleep instantly and slept all night as soundly as though we were lying on couches of down. When we awoke at daybreak, we found ourselves covered with snow that had fallen on us in the night without our being aware of it. The snow was really a good thing, for it helped to keep us warm by excluding the air.

We got back to Otterville with our prisoners and captured material of war two or three days before Christmas. The war department at Washington and General Halleck, commander of the department of Missouri, regarded the section we were campaigning in as friendly, and the population really contained a good many Union men. When the men went out in small squads to forage, they carried money with them, and scrupulously paid for all they took. True, in the absence of good money they dealt out "wildcat" bills on broken banks and bank notes that had never been signed, but they were cheerfully, even thankfully, received, and I have no doubt continued to circulate down there till they became worn out.

Soon the men began to show a desire to enjoy themselves more as they had been used to do at home than they had been able to do at any time since they had become soldiers. While discipline was maintained, the relations between officers and men were cordial and friendly, and with the holiday season every liberty compatible with the safety of the command and the performance of necessary duties was permitted. Small foraging parties scoured the country roundabout and gathered up a supply of chickens, turkeys and pigs wherewith to eke out the army hard tack and salt horse. The mails that reached us at tolerably regular intervals contained many packages from mothers, wives, sisters and sweethearts. And every wagon train that reached us from the nearest railroad terminus brought boxes from home for both officers and men. They were filled with a great array and assortment of articles supposed to be necessary for the welfare and comfort of the men. In the main these articles ran to things to eat, especially cakes, jellies and preserves, all homemade and therefore doubly relished. There were articles of wearing apparel in every box. In those days paper collars, some linen lined, and others nothing but paper, were in high favor throughout the west. Nearly every box contained a supply of them, so that the recipient could present what the boys called a "Sunday go to meeting" appearance.

As our communication with St. Louis was not regular, these boxes did not all arrive at the same time. They began, in fact, to come about a week before Christmas and continued to come at intervals for a month afterward. Pretty much everything the boxes contained was, so to speak, grist for the boys. But when one young fellow found a feather pillow in his box he failed to join in the laugh his comrades raised and never seemed to relish being dubbed "Private Pillow."

Christmas came bright and clear, a splendid winter day. After the usual morning routine of a military camp the regiments were formed, with side arms only, and marched out to their respective parade grounds to attend divine service and listen to sermons appropriate to the day in a time of war. After this the men were dismissed to enjoy themselves in their own way—all, that is, except those engaged in guard and other military duties. They played ball, ran foot races, held jumping matches, pitched horse or mule shoes in lieu of quoits, got up mule races and generally disported themselves like a lot of schoolboys out for a holiday. The more quietly disposed read such books and papers as the camp afforded or wrote letters home. Some just loafed. Others drew their tent flaps tight and played cards, the great American game of draw poker being the favorite, with grains of corn for chips. The officers passed the time in much the same way, only, as a rule, more dignifiedly, as became their rank.

The cooks got up the best dinners they could, the tables being graced with all the dainties and good things that had come from the loved and loving ones at home. Men and officers enjoyed this the first Christmas in the army for all, and the last on earth for many, for these troops, then so merry, were destined within a few weeks to pass through the three days' deadly storm and strife of Pea Ridge, known to the Confederates as Elkhorn Tavern, the first pitched battle of the war after Bull Run and the first considerable victory of Union troops in the field. But for that one day strife and death were far from their thoughts.

Such was my first Christmas in the army and the only one which made much impression on me as Christmas.

Thos. J. Brady

MERRY XMAS.

Not an Xmas.

It had been a very hard week in the street and Tom Sellshort was feeling poorer than a millionaire with personal taxes due. Consequently he felt like running for the door when his wife greeted him with a cheery, "I'm making out a list of Christmas presents, dear, and you're just in time."

"Time—that's what I'll need if I pay for them," thought Tom, but he kissed his wife and sat down to assist her. "How much have you spent already on paper?"

"Well, it's $200," she admitted slowly, "but you see that buys presents for four—four people. I don't think that's very bad. Do your dear?"

"N-o-o-o-o," Tom replied a little doubtfully, "but how—how many are we going to remember at $50 per remember?"

"There are only eight more expensive presents, dear, but here is another—another little list of about—about 80 presents, dear"—Mrs. Sellshort began timidly.

"What! Another list?" Tom exclaimed. "Never mind the items. How much are we short?"

The pretty woman beside him buried her face in her kerchief and sobbed, "I—I think you—you are very unkind, after I've worked so hard pre-preparing the l-l-lists"—

"There, there, dear," Tom said soothingly, patting her shoulder. "Never mind. It's all right. My credit's still good at Stacy's. What's the total of your little list?"

"Six—six hundred and th-thirty dol-dollars," was the faint reply from the depths of the handkerchief.

"Let me see," thought Sellshort. "Six hundred and thirty and two hundred is eight hundred and thirty dollars, and that added to the eight hundred dollar piano I have promised the little girl here makes sixteen hundred and thirty dollars for merry Christmas presents, eh? Never mind, little girl," he added aloud. "Get them all at Starcy's and have them charged. They sell everything there from a hairpin to a house and lot. So don't cry any more."

It was cold weather, but Sellshort paused a moment to mop his perspiring brow. "I'll get the piano of Beethoven Bros.," he thought, "and hang them up for it, temporarily, I hope. And so they call Christmas Xmas, do they? Well, if things don't brighten up pretty soon it won't be an Xmas for Starcy and Beethoven Bros. this year. It will be just an $MDCXXXmas, sure pop!"

Once more to mark the Christmas morn
Time's murmuring tides their tumults cease,
For on this day a King was born,
The prophet pointed Prince of Peace.

The waifs are singing in the street,
And distant hills and icy dells
Their merry Christmases repeat
And hear the clang of Christmas bells.

Pile up the Yule log's ancient flame;
Bring in the feast of savory worth.
Today the name of every name
Shall sweep the circuit of the earth.

And burdens of the soul shall flee
Since he took up the cross for us,
And all the sorrows that can be
Shall turn to triumphs glorious.

Now lovely maids whose hearts beat high
Shall stand beneath the mistletoe,
While in the purpled eastern sky
Sweet symbols of this day shall glow.

Let evergreen and holly make
Their wreaths for every human door
And good cheer, for the Master's sake,
Come without stint to rich and poor.

Ring, Christmas bells, this joyous morn!
Let not your peals or music cease,
For on this day a King was born—
The gentle, heaven ordained Prince of Peace.

FATHER CHRISTMAS.

A Suggestion to the Boys For Christmas Celebrations.

Why couldn't our boys get up some holiday plays similar to the immemorial "Father Christmas" play, in which the lads of Merrie England have so much fun? The origin of this play is lost in antiquity, but it deals with knights and their adventures, certain of which challenge and fight the followers of Father Christmas, and are in turn routed, till Father Christmas and the Black Knight come in mortal combat, the latter, of course, being worsted.

The boys are dressed in fantastic style, with tall paper caps on and paper fringe around their jackets, wearing masks to conceal their identity. They are called the "mummers," and go from house to house of their friends, invariably receiving a kind welcome and a little treat at the end of the performance. They also take up a penny collection, and everybody has a penny for the mummers who afford so much amusement.

In our early history there is abundant scope for the youthful playwrights, and the object of their performances in holiday week might be some charity in which boys are the beneficiaries, such as a treat of "goodies" to a dozen newsboys or bootblacks, to get supplies for a sick boy or the like.

The Indian in our early history is as good as the knight element for a stirring play for mummers—Massasoit and his tribe, in war paint, feathers and blankets, on the one side, and on the other the prim Puritans, in broad brimmed hats and short breeches.

Or the Pocahontas and Powhatan drama, with John Smith, the hero, and a band of cavaliers to make it lively. The boys of Boston Common and the red coated Britishers was an episode to inspire their fraternity of today, and it would be great fun for our laddies in Christmas week to dress up and illustrate the valor of their ancestors, as their English cousins annually commemorate some otherwise forgotten achievement of feudal days.—Philadelphia Record.

Diagnosis.

"I regret to say," remarked the young physician, "that you have peristaltic neurilemma. The symptoms are unmistakable."

"Dear me!" exclaimed the astonished patient. "What in the world is peristaltic neurilemma, doctor?"

"It is, sir, the disease from which you are suffering," answered the young M. D. haughtily.—Chicago News.

Insensible to Pain.

A mother's love for her children is always being illustrated, not only in books, but in real life. A true story is told of a lady whose baby was very ill and who sat watching the child with absorbed attention, every instant fearing another convulsion and praying for deliverance from it. At her side stood an older child, who had stolen into the room unobserved and who was trying to prick the little black spots in mamma's muslin sleeve with a needle he had found. Presently the father came in, and the little child was seen and sent away.

"What is the matter with your arm?" whispered the gentleman to his wife when at last they turned to each other and smiled their thankfulness that the baby had fallen asleep.

"I don't know," said she. "Nothing that I am aware of."

She put up her hand and found that the thin muslin sleeve was soaked with blood. The little boy had become so absorbed in his sport that he had jabbed with all his might, and she in her terrible anxiety had not felt the thrusts.

The men of eighty-five and ninety years of age are not the rotund well fed; but thin, spare men who live on a slender diet. Be as careful as he will, however, a man past middle age will occasionally eat too much or of some article of food not suited to his constitution, and will need a dose of Carlsbad Sprudel Salts, Stomach and Liver Tablets to cleanse and invigorate his stomach and regulate his liver and kidneys. When this is done there is no reason why the average man should not live to old age. For sale by all druggist.

The bride was dressed in white satin, trimmed with point d'esprit, and she carried bride roses. THE CHRISTMAS BRIGADES

Blare o' the trumpet and roll o' the drum
A glitter of little tin blades,
And, led by their cute little captains, they come—
The curly haired Christmas brigades!
Was ever an army so fair to view?
And it's marching straight to the hearts of you!

What shall we do 'gainst an army like this,
That is blest of the angels above?
It comes but to challenge a mother's sweet kiss,
And its beautiful banner is love!
Sure, never was army so fair to view,
Or marched so straight to the hearts of you!

Come on with the trumpet, the little toy drum!
Come on with the little tin blades!
Our hearts beat a welcome and cry to you, "Come,
Oh, curly haired Christmas brigades!"
Come on, little heroes in gray and in blue,
And we'll capture and kiss every soldier of you!

—F. L. Stanton.

BRAVE LITTLE BORRIOBOOLA GHA.

It wasn't so very happy to begin with, Christmas eve was a little dreary. Maggie only hummed a carol because it was more her way to sing than to cry, and the carol was the only thing she could think of just then. It was the first carol she had ever learned. She could remember just how sweet her mother had looked while teaching it to her and Jimmie, the brother, who would keep his seventh Christmas tomorrow—keep it in heaven, she thought, with a gleam of sorrowful joy. The dear mother who was in the hospital now, whose Christmas would be spent in a whitewashed ward, clean, bright and tender, with kindly care, but still not so bright as the little attic room would have been if only she could have been there. Maggie's song grew very queer at this point of her reflections, and her voice was a trifle unsteady, but she persisted in humming "It came upon the midnight clear," and even smiled a little as she laid down the cheap little doll she had been dressing for Sweetie, the dear little sister who was her darling, and who was now being cared for by kind friends of her mother's youth.

In another moment she was dashing down newspaper alley at full speed, elbowing her way a trifle more gently than the average habitee of that far famed locality, but pushing to the front with a dogged resolution none the less, and no sooner had the bunch of papers which came in answer to her warcry of "Twenty-five specials—throw 'em along quick, Jimmie!" reached her arms, than she was off with a bound, and a cry of "Papiers! Papiers! Here is yer extry!" which sounded startlingly loud and harsh to come from that girlish throat. Down Mason street she flew, anxious to reach the "stand" which the boys of that corner had unanimously ceded to her with rough chivalry when she had first appeared upon the scene, timid, nervous, afraid to cry her wares. She was the first of all the crowd to reach State street. "Papier, papier! Here is yer extry! All about the accident at Borrioboola Gha!" she shrieked in the voice which would have been sweet and clear but for its hard treatment and out of doors use, or rather abuse, and a queer little smile curved the corners of her mouth as she gave vent to her peculiar "trademark," as the "other boys" were wont to call the odd name which invariably closed her exhortation to buy an evening paper.

That exclamation had quite a history. When Maggie had been driven by her mother's illness and the want of food in the home cupboard to try paper selling, she had been afraid to cry loudly, and her conscience, home taught and tender, had forbidden her to invent news announcements after the fashion of others of her "perfesh." For some days she had sold very little in consequence, and the capital she had each morning invested in papers seemed in a fair way to be lost, when Irish Pat, the toughest boy in the gang, had taken her to his heart and shown her the mistake which spoiled her sales.

"Yer don't know nothin, yer don't," he had said contemptuously, striding along by her side with an exaggerated imitation of the walk of the last actor he had admired from the "peanut heaven" of the Academy and keeping level with her as she dejectedly started homeward, crying softly and wiping the tears away with her ragged but clean handkerchief.

"Yer too bloomin scared," he said, again copying the Academy actor, both in speech and gesticulation, "an yer'll never do no good till yer makes yer roar more like a better feller than yerself."

He paused and looked at Maggie expectantly, but Maggie had no idea that the "better feller" was Pat himself, and she never dreamed that the pause should have been filled with a compliment, well deserved, in Pat's opinion, so she said nothing, and the boy took up his parable again.

"Now, this yer's the way yer calls," he said, imitating her weak little cry to the life, "an this yer's the way yer oughter yell." And he let out a shout of "Paper here! Paper! All about the great fire on the west side! Many lives lost! Nineteen firemen go down in the ruins!" which startled Maggie and rang down the street for a block or more.

Maggie soon found this to be true, if she was to equal the sales of the other paper sellers. But still, as has been said, her conscience rebelled against the deceit. So she decided with the of the compromises possible only to innocent souls upon inventing a cry about an event which could not possibly happen.

and, having read "Bleak House," she chose the words "Borrioboola Gha" as her "roar." She said nothing to her mother of all this, although the struggle in her mind was long and severe, and she longed sorely for sympathy and advice. She had grown so accustomed to using the "yell" that she no longer thought of it at all. She called out the long word as she did that of "Paper!" and it had no more significance to her.

But on this particular day, this dreary Christmas eve, as she stood mechanically repeating it, thinking meanwhile of the added pleasure for her mother and Sweetie which every penny meant, she was startled by a light touch on her shoulder and turned her head to see a kindly face looking down into hers.

"Where do you say the accident happened?" queried the tall, pleasant faced man who owned the hand which still lay on her arm. "Did you say Borrioboola Gha? I have heard a great many queer cries used by newsboys," he said with a whimsical smile at the pretty face, which bent away from him, "but yours is the most peculiar I have ever known. Did you borrow it from Dickens?"

"Yes, sir," she whispered, blushing still deeper, and hurrying breathlessly into her explanation. "Yes, sir. You see, the boys said I'd have to make up a roar if I was going to sell papers, and I thought that was honest anyway."

"Poor little kid!" he thought later, as he heard her cry ring out under his window as he sat in his comfortable room at the hotel. "Poor little kid! I wish I could do something for her. She reminds me of Jennie, somehow. Poor Jennie!" And in reveries of his dear, lost sight of sister he forget all about Maggie, and thought no more of her until he heard her again the next morning—Christmas morning.

"Not a cheerful day for a fellow who's got nothing but money to help him enjoy himself, and no on to share that with," he thought as he dressed slowly, drearily, for the day promised to be long and barren. "If I only had Jennie and her babies to help me out. By Jove!" and he quickened his movements with a look of sudden interest, "I'll hunt up Little Borrioboola Gha and give her a jolly Christmas. She looks as though it wouldn't do her any harm, and I can 'play pretender,' as Jennie's baby used to say, play that she is one of Jennie's children."

Hastily completing his toilet, he disposed of a hearty breakfast, his pulses quickening as he thought of the pleasure which lay before him, the pleasure of giving happiness to another, the one pleasure which neither the world, the flesh, nor the devil has the power to mar or spoil.

Meanwhile the object of his thoughts had finished selling her papers the night before and gone slowly homeward, resisting the temptation to stay out in the brilliantly lighted streets because of her mother's well remembered request to this effect, and after buying as much candy and fruit for Sweetie as was consistent with saving a few pennies to buy a flower to go to the hospital with her and the baby tomorrow afternoon and laying enough away to buy her stock the next day she had got straight into bed.

When she awoke, it was broad daylight, the shining light of Christmas day, which has never seemed quite like that of ordinary days since that first wondrous dawn nearly 1,900 years ago, and she sprang up with the sweet Christmas joy in her heart and face, in spite of her aching toes and lonely condition.

"Now for a cup of coffee and a doughnut," she thought as she hurriedly fastened her garments, "and then for my papers."

"Well, Little Borrioboola Gha," said the same kindly voice which had greeted her the day before, "merry Christmas to you."

"Same to you, sir," she answered shyly, glancing up at him with the eyes which reminded him so forcibly of his sister. "Paper, sir?"

"Well, yes, I suppose so," he responded, reaching in his pocket for a $1 bill. "How are you going to spend your Christmas?"

"I'm going to the hospital to see mamma after I get through selling," said Maggie, who, with a child's quick intuition, had divined that this was a man to be trusted. "And I'm going to take Sweetie with me."

"Who is Sweetie?" was the next question, asked with a sympathetic intonation which somehow expressed all the kindly words he did not say about her mother. And Maggie, whose heart opened easily to any one who used the key of "Sweetie" wherewith to unlock it, grew talkative at once.

"Sweetie's my sister," she prattled, forgetting her wares in the joy of telling her love to some one. "My baby sister. And she's been specially mine ever since mamma got sick and had to go to the hospital. Auntie and Uncle Stewart have got her now," she went on, not noticing the start the gentleman gave, "but I'm going to get her back to live with us just as soon as mamma can come home."

"Is Auntie Stewart your real aunt?" queried her listener, a strange interest in his tone and manner. "And what is your mamma's name?"

"No. Auntie Stewart is an old friend of mamma's and papa's," answered Maggie, tucking her papers more tightly under her arm, "and mamma's name is Jennie Brownell."

"Jennie Brownell!" gasped the man at her side, grasping her arm so tightly that the tender flesh was bruised. "Jennie Brownell! And what was your papa's name?"

"Papa's name was Arthur Brownell," said Maggie, wondering more and more at this man's odd behavior. "But he's been dead a long, long time, and mamma took care of us until she got sick and I was big enough."

"You big enough," exclaimed her listener excitedly. "You big enough, you poor baby! Why, how old are you?"

"I'm just 13," said Maggie proudly, "and, indeed, sir, I'm big enough. Why, I've taken care of us for nearly a year now, and Sweetie would rather stay with me than with Auntie Stewart. I give her such nice things to eat," she finished innocently.

"To say nothing of the love you evidently lavish upon her," murmured the gentleman to himself. "Well, Little Borrioboola Gha, what do you say to a change? I think you must be my niece."

"Oh, then you must be Uncle Jack," said Maggie, accepting this new and wonderful state of affairs with a child's innocent faith and belief in all things wonderful and bright and good. "Yes, you do look like mamma. She's talked of you so much that I feel I quite know you," she added quaintly.

"You're not going to sell papers any more," said her uncle, as they crossed the street to his hotel. "And now for a merry Christmas. It won't be possible to do anything about clothes today," with a rueful look at Maggie's garments, "but we'll do something nice anyway. What hospital did you say your mother was at?"

"St. Luke's," answered Maggie, smiling as happily as though the griefs of the morning had never troubled her. "Are you going to see her too?"

"Yes," said Uncle Jack, smiling down at the eager face, "we're going there right away, but we'll stop and buy some flowers first."

And they set forth, only to find disappointment awaiting them at the hospital. Mrs. Brownell had left the hospital that morning in the care of a strange gentleman who had brought a carriage for her.

"Was it Uncle Stewart?" asked Maggie, and the kindly girl hesitated before replying, catching the busy nurse as she turned away.

"Uncle Stewart!" she said at length. "The old gentleman who came here with her and sometimes brings the little girl? No, it was a much younger man."

"Did mamma know him?" asked Maggie, with a shade of sadness darkening her expressive face in a manner which did not escape her uncle's notice, and again the good natured nurse staid her steps to reply.

"Yes," she said, with a pleasant, if hasty, smile, "she was delighted to see him and went with him at once."

Maggie turned away sadly, a tear falling on her shabby frock, and she did not refuse the comforting pressure of her uncle's hand as they walked down the long ward together.

"Let's go to Sweetie," suggested her uncle, with a view to distracting her. After making inquiries and finding that Mrs. Brownell had left no address Maggie, who felt that all the world was sad and her doll stuffed with sawdust with a vengeance, assented drearily.

"Maybe she'll be gone, too," she said mournfully, her lip quivering with a pitiful sorrow, as they stopped into the carriage again, and she did not speak again until the horses drew up at Mrs. Stewart's door. Her uncle lifted her out. She sprang up the stairs and rang the bell, and then—then the world resumed its normal coloring, and her doll was once more worth loving, for Sweetie had leaped to her arms, and there in the hall behind was mamma.

"Jack!" she said softly after kissing Maggie frantically. "Well, this must be Easter day instead of Christmas. Two resurrections from the dead!" and she drew his attention to another man who had seized upon Maggie as she released her and was embracing her as though he would never let her go again.

"My darling! My own little girl!" he kept repeating, and it suddenly dawned upon Maggie that it must be her papa, alive again in some wonderful, mysterious, Christmas kind of way and come back to care for her and mamma and Sweetie.

"We won't waste time upon long explanations now," said this gentleman as he put Maggie down at last. "I have been prostrated by an accident which caused me to lose my memory until a week ago and my name was mistakenly sent to Jennie here," indicating his wife by a tender glance, "as among those killed by the collision which only injured my brain. When my memory returned to me, I made all speed to come back to her, and not being able to find the smallest trace of her I thought of dear old Aunt and Uncle Stewart. I knew they would be kind to my poor darlings. And then I went to the hospital and brought her away. We never thought of Maggie going there so early, and I was to wait for her there this afternoon. We hardly know how to reach her sooner."

"Well, I lost all trace of you all while I was out west," said Uncle Jack, taking possession of Maggie again, "and I only found this little girl by the merest accident." And he lifted Maggie lovingly to his knee, for they had reached the parlor by this time.

And after that? Well, it was Christmas day, and all the stores were closed, but money will do a great deal, and it wasn't long before Auntie Stewart's scantily filled larder was plentifully supplied, and an immense turkey was roasting in the oven.

And when the dinner had been eaten and everybody had told everybody else how glad and happy and surprised they were they sat close together and made plans for the future, lovely, wonderful plans, which seemed almost too good to come true. But they did come true, many of them, and, the best of all, perhaps, was Uncle Jack's plan for Maggie.

"This little girl is going to be a beautiful singer by and by," he said, with a tender good night kiss as he carried her up to the little attic room Auntie Stewart had insisted upon their using for the night, while papa followed with Sweetie, "to say nothing of being a noble woman if she grows up as brave and unselfish as she is now. I noticed how strong and sweet her voice bade fair to be the moment I heard her giving the 'roar' which astonished me so much. And I am going to see that it has the best of training. And my pet name for her will always be 'Little Borrioboola Gha.'"—Chicago Inter Ocean.

PORTRAITURES OF CHRIST.

Singular Diversion of Views by the Great Masters.

IT IS a singular fact that throughout the entire New Testament there is nothing regarding the personal appearance of Christ, and the early fathers of the church, who doubtless knew something of how he looked while on earth, are equally silent about it. A portrait of him has been claimed by some to have come down from apostolic times, and that copies of it were taken and are still extant. That this statement has no foundation in fact would appear to be evident from the circumstance that the old masters, in their representations of the Saviour, follow no recognized model and are as various in such portraitures as were their conceptions of what the real Christ should be.

This diversity must be apparent to all who have examined such paintings in the Louvre and other large collections. In Fra F. Lippi's "Madonna and Child," for instance, an exquisite creation, the face of the Infant Saviour, though perfect in contour, has a look of precocious intelligence which seems unnatural in one so young. Carlo Dolci, Murillo and others, though displaying different types of child life, are perhaps equally successful in conveying a nearly satisfying ideal in their representations of the child Christ. They all, however, pay no regard to ethnic considerations in their work, and as a result the face is Italian, French, Spanish or Flemish, as the case may be, rather than Jewish, as it should have been.

In paintings of the man Christ there is a still greater diversity noticeable, as would be naturally expected. The face of Christ in F. B. Francia's painting, "The Virgin and Two Angels Weeping Over the Dead Body of Christ," is probably the divinest conception of it ever traced on canvas. Though the face is evidently that of the dead, all the emotions of the soul seem to be mirrored upon it. In Borgognone's "Christ Bearing the Cross," Correggio's "Ecce Homo," Guido Reni's "Ecce Homo," all marvelous creations, as well as in others perhaps equally meritorious, however different they may be, they at least convey an ideal Christ, which does not shock Christian sensibilities, as does Munkacsy's representation of the Saviour in his famous painting, "Christ Before Pilate."

NEIL MACDONALD.

An Emergency Medicine.

For sprains, bruises, burns, scalds and similar injuries, there is nothing so good as Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It soothes the wound and not only gives instant relief from pain, but causes the parts to heal in about one third the time required by the usual treatment. As it is an antiseptic all danger from blood poisoning is avoided. Sold by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Mrs. Youngbryde—What are you going to give your husband for Christmas?

Mrs. Longwed—I think I shall give him a new mahogany tea table—I've wanted one a long time.

Skeleton of a Lay Sermon For Christmas.

First.—Young women who are thinking of giving Christmas remembrances to their pastors should remember that the straight and narrow path is not an easy road to travel at all times, and therefore stout walking shoes may be more appropriate than embroidered slippers.

Second.—Measure the value of the gifts you receive by the motives of the givers and not by their intrinsic value. Oftentimes when the proper standard is used the humblest gift, costing but a few cents, is found to be of more real worth than the richest, most expensive present.

Third.—If you have made up your mind to give so and so a Christmas gift just because you think you are going to receive one from that quarter, you would better abandon the idea altogether. Christmas gifts prompted by anything but a desire to confer a real pleasure upon the recipient had best go ungiven.

Fourth.—It's a good thing to eat the old time Christmas dainties at Christmas time—the rich black plum pudding, the boar's head and the juicy baked goose—just the same as our forbears did. But if you have indigestion the next morning do not grumble. Go out into the sunshine and walk five miles, or better yet, hunt up an ax and a log of wood and make the chips fly for an hour or two. It is a law of nature that whoso will not physically labor shall not overeat with impunity.

Fifth.—It's a good thing to remember that the recording angel is likely to make a bigger entry to your credit on his books because of the gift of a half worn overcoat to a shivering fellow man or a dinner to a half starved and possibly grimy urchin than because of a costly jewel given to a favorite of fortune.

Sixth.—Christmas is the day of all the year on which the unlovely traits of your character should be smothered, and it would be a great thing for you if you were to manage in some way this year to get rid of those traits altogether.

In England the day after Christmas, "boxing day" as it is called, is a day of greater festivity among the working classes than Christmas itself. "Boxing day" is so called from the Christmas boxes, each containing money given by the rich to the poor in olden times.

BRAVE LITTLE BORRIOBOOLA GHA.

It wasn't so very happy to begin with. Christmas eve was a little dreary. Maggie only hummed a carol because it was more her way to sing than to cry, and the carol was the only thing she could think of just then. It was the first carol she had ever learned. She could remember just how sweet her mother had looked while teaching it to her and Jimmie, the brother, who would keep his seventh Christmas tomorrow—keep it in heaven, she thought, with a gleam of sorrowful joy. The dear mother who was in the hospital now, whose Christmas would be spent in a whitewashed ward, clean, bright and tender, with kindly care, but still not so bright as the little attic room would have been if only she could have been there. Maggie's song grew very queer at this point of her reflections, and her voice was a trifle unsteady, but she persisted in humming "It came upon the midnight clear," and even smiled a little as she laid down the cheap little doll she had been dressing for Sweetie, the dear little sister who was her darling, and who was now being cared for by kind friends of her mother's youth.

In another moment she was dashing down newspaper alley at full speed, elbowing her way a trifle more gently than the average habitue of that far famed locality, but pushing to the front with a dogged resolution none the less, and no sooner had the bunch of papers which came in answer to her warcry of "Twenty-five specials—throw 'em along quick, Jimmie!" reached her arms than she was off with a bound, and a cry of "Papiers! Papiers! Here is yer extry!" which sounded startlingly loud and harsh to come from that girlish throat. Down Mason street she flew, anxious to reach the "stand" which the boys of that corner had unanimously ceded to her with rough chivalry when she had first appeared upon the scene, timid, nervous, afraid to cry her wares. She was the first of all the crowd to reach State street. "Papier, papier! Here is yer extry! All about the accident at Borrioboola Gha!" she shrieked in the voice which would have been sweet and clear but for its hard treatment and out of doors use, or rather abuse, and a queer little smile curved the corners of her mouth as she gave vent to her peculiar "trademark," as the "other boys" were wont to call the odd name which invariably closed her exhortation to buy an evening paper.

That exclamation had quite a history. When Maggie had been driven by her mother's illness and the want of food in the home cupboard to try paper selling, she had been afraid to cry loudly, and her conscience, home taught and tender, had forbidden her to invent news announcements after the fashion of others of her "perfesh." For some days she had sold very little in consequence, and the capital she had each morning invested in papers seemed in a fair way to be lost, when Irish Pat, the toughest boy in the gang, had taken her to his heart and shown her the mistake which spoiled her sales.

"Yer don't know nothin, yer don't," he had said contemptuously, striding along by her side with an exaggerated imitation of the walk of the last actor he had admired from the "peanut heaven" of the Academy and keeping level with her as she dejectedly started homeward, crying softly and wiping the tears away with her ragged but clean handkerchief.

"Yer too bloomin scared," he said, again copying the Academy actor, both in speech and gesticulation, "an yer'll never come good till yer makes yer roar more like a better feller than yerself."

He paused and looked at Maggie expectantly, but Maggie had no idea that the "better feller" was Pat himself, and she never dreamed that the pause should have been filled with a compliment, well deserved, in Pat's opinion, as she said nothing, and the boy took up his parable again.

"Now, this yer's the way yer calls," he said, imitating her weak little cry in the life, "an this yer's the way yer oughter yell." And he let out a shout of "Paper here! Paper! All about the accident on the west side! Many lives lost! Nineteen firemen go down in the ruins!" which startled Maggie and sent down the street for a block or

CHRISTMAS DUTIES.

JUNIUS HENRI BROWNE ON BELIEVING AND DOING.

Broad Religious Influence of the Day. Morality and Humanity—What Jesus Was and What He Labored For—Man's Conduct His Justification.

[Copyright, ... by American Press Association.]

Nearly all the early Christian festivals which are still extant were shrewdly founded on the pagan festivals preceding them, so that the influence of the old and the new could be united and identified. Christmas, as commemorative of the birth of Jesus, is an exception, having been religious from the beginning. The day of the event was not agreed on until the fourth century, when, by an inquiry of theologians, Dec. 25 was decided to be the date, which has been observed ever since. In this country the gloomy, morbid Puritans earnestly opposed any celebration of Christmas as savoring of the scarlet woman, especially if of a social or convivial kind, for they regarded all pleasure, however innocent, as wicked, shirking to gain heaven in the next world by making a hell of this. The mass of Americans, whether young or old, no longer couple the day with theology. They consider it a time for taking substantial comfort and making merry. Christmas presents, Christmas dinners, Christmas gayeties of every sort are significant of Dec. 25, are looked forward to with fond anticipations and backward at with mild regret, like all pleasant things that have passed.

The mere fact that the day, whether accurate or not, is indelibly associated with Christ, with Jesus, with his nativity, with the record of his noble, beautiful, self sacrificing life, entirely devoted to humanity, should render it precious and inspiring. It matters not whether he be believed to be the Son of God or the son of man—his acts, his supreme generosity and benevolence, his total self denial, his sublime courage, his sovereign altruism remain, in either case, precisely the same. Regarding him simply as human, his entire life would seem indeed to be grander, more exalted, more touching, more consecrated than if he were accounted supernatural. He would be divine in his humanity, not through miracle, but through superlative goodness, purity, exalted passion for the welfare of his fellows. To the thoroughly rationalistic, he might not appear so truly heroic, so unapproachable, so morally wonderful in the light of a God as in the light of a man. In one instance he might seem to be playing a part; to be going through an imposed form; to be something less ... he would prove himself absolutely, awfully sincere, rising gloriously above the common weakness of his race, reaching the loftiest pinnacle of the ethically sublime. As an heir of time and nature, he is without companion, competitor or peer, the grandest ideal of humanity.

Jesus, judged by reason alone, was the first, as he may have been the last, perfect, completely flawless man. He was the primary democrat. In his eyes all his fellows were equals. The prince and slave, the courtier and the hind, the scholar and the yokel were on the same level. He demanded justice for the whole race, and he tempered justice with mercy. He was the first to esteem, to revere woman for her womanhood, to stand between her and the wrongs of her stronger, less sympathetic partner. He was as tender as he was fearless. He was the sole pioneer of true civilization, a moral and political reformer and centuries in advance of his time. This it was that led to his destruction. The Pharisees naturally hated him. They were active in his undoing. Brought to the sanhedrin, he was declared guilty of irreligion and condemned to death. Arraigned before Pontius Pilate, governor of the province, charged with sedition, he was also sentenced (though Pilate believed him innocent) on account of the clamor and insistence of the people. His offense no doubt was political. It was feared he would undermine the institutions of the time, for he, himself a Jew, was hostile to the temper and spirit of the Jews, who were violent and sanguinary, as was all humanity at that era. He suffered as any one might have suffered who was far beyond his epoch, whose opinions, feelings, convictions were adverse to those of the community in which he moved. He had the soul of a martyr, the strength and will for martyrdom. He died for humanity, as he knew he must die, and was happy in so dying. The end, which he clearly saw, crowned the work, completed his spiritual career, haloed it forever.

Such an example is always before us; it cannot be obliterated, dimmed or distorted. Each return of Christmas should revive it in our minds and hearts. The influence of the day, whatever our understanding of theology, must be, in the best sense, religious. Jesus is an eternal pattern. We cannot reach it, but we can strive toward it. He is the embodiment of the best possible in manhood, of generosity, friendship, brotherhood, democracy, tenderness, self sacrifice, love and charity. He is altogether beyond dogma. Admiration, affection for him is a new faith, a revelation outside of Revelation, Christianity higher than the Christianity of the church.

Were he, the lowly, devoted, stainless man of sorrows, to return to earth tomorrow, many who esteem themselves most pious would not recognise him, would not welcome him. Many of the churches dedicated to him would not admit him, nor would he enter where their splendors shine. He would seek the poor, the humble, the abodes of indigence and wretchedness. He could not breathe freely in the sumptuous temples reared in his honor. He would not, he could not, worship among his worshipers. Christ would be isolated in a throng of Christians. They would not sympathize with him; they would avoid him; they would not deem him worthy to associate with their superiority. So much has Christianity changed since Christ was in the world.

Christmas, considered in its best significance, should not inculcate any special creed, any class of dogmas, any form of ritual, but the broader, deeper spirit of religion, consisting of morality joined to humanity. It should teach the practical lessons of Jesus' life, the divinely human of his nature, the truest, rarest, highest that is in our common nature. From him and from the inspiring festival we should learn to be more willing and eager to help our fellows, to sympathize with the distressed and unfortunate, to relieve every want, to heal every hurt, to soften every woe. So Jesus did to the very end. And if we imitate him, however remotely, we may be sure that we are aiding somewhat in the progress and welfare of the race, acting the part of brotherhood whether we obey dogma or violate tenet. Not what we believe, but what we do, is our sovereign justification.

Rain Coat For a Bear.

There is one big brown bear in New York that gets coddled beyond belief. He belongs to a Sixth avenue furrier. He is not a live bear. Even the memory of the oldest passenger on the elevated road goeth not back to the time of that bear's demise; yet, in spite of his long period as a "dead one," he is the sleekest, best groomed bear in New York. That is because the furrier takes such good care of him.

Storms are never allowed to beat upon his glossy coat. He cannot be humored to the extent of being brought indoors during a downpour, because it is his business to stand on a pedestal outside and drum up trade, but the next best thing is done for him. He is provided with a rain coat. It covers him from snout to tail; so, no matter how hard the rain may beat or the wind may blow, he is insured from damage thereby.—New York Press.

TOM L. JOHNSON.

MAYOR TOM L. JOHNSON of Cleveland, who is widely known for his aggressiveness as a reformer, is under discussion now on account of his campaign against suicide. There have been so many suicides in Cleveland recently that the mayor concluded to try to do something to stop them. So he has appointed a commission to inquire into the matter, to provide work for those who are despondent on account of lack of employment and to give friendly advice or assistance to such as need it.

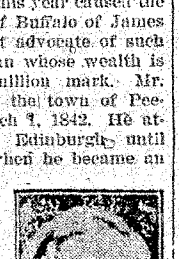
Mayor Johnson, who has a large fortune and some time ago retired from active business in order to devote himself to promoting his economic and political ideas, was an office boy in a foundry in Louisville at twelve years of age and drew a salary of $2 per week. One day one of the owners of the foundry saw the industrious office boy rush into the street, pick up a bit of iron and, returning, throw it on the scrap heap inside. When the boy reentered the office he said to him:

"Why did you do that, my son?"

"Why, sir," said Tom, a bit embarrassed, "there was no use wasting it. They can put it in the furnace and use it over again."

"Well, I just think I can use you, young man, in the street car business. How would you like to come at $7 a week?"

Young Johnson accepted the five dollar raise with alacrity.



John S. Sargent, the famous painter, attended a banquet in New York not long ago. He met a young lady whom he knew very well, and she said, "Oh, Mr. Sargent, I saw your latest painting and kissed it, because it was so much like you."

"And did it kiss you in return?"

"Why, no."

"Then," said Mr. Sargent, "it was not like me."

The municipal ownership sentiment which has affected political results in several large cities this year caused the election as mayor of Buffalo of James N. Adam, an ardent advocate of such principles and a man whose wealth is rated above the million mark. Mr. Adam was born in the town of Peebles, Scotland, March 7, 1842. He attended school at Edinburgh until twelve years old, when he became an apprentice in the dry goods trade. In 1872 he came to America and located in Buffalo, where he established a dry goods business that grew to be one of the largest of the kind between New York and Chicago. Last year he retired from active business after a commercial career covering half a century. In 1895 he was elected a member of the board of councilmen. Owing to his familiarity with the success of the municipal ownership idea in his native land Mr. Adam became an enthusiastic supporter of the principle and as a councilman stood out against the disposal of public franchises to private corporations. In 1901 he was nominated on the Democratic ticket as alderman from a ward considered to be a Republican stronghold and was elected, party lines being disregarded. Two years later he was again elected a councilman. He was nominated by the Democrats for mayor this fall on a platform declaring emphatically for municipal ownership and was elected by a majority of nearly 10,000, although last year, when Mr. Roosevelt ran for president, the city went Republican by about 10,000. Mr. Adam is a typical Scotchman and has been known as a persistent and fearless fighter for policies he believes to be right.

JAMES N. ADAM.

The investigation of life insurance companies has brought out the fact that many of them pay very large salaries to their officers, and the question has been raised whether such salaries are justifiable. Elbert Henry Gary, chairman of the board of directors of the United States Steel corporation, says that the real question is not whether salaries are too large, but whether the right men are drawing them. He gets $100,000 a year himself and avers that $100,000 or even $150,000 a year is not too large for the right man as the head of a big insurance company. In proof of this he declares that any bank would be fortunate to get the services of J. Pierpont Morgan if it could, even at a salary of $1,000,000 a year.

ELBERT H. GARY.

Judge Gary is a native of Wheaton, Ill., and was born in 1846. He is a graduate of Chicago university and of the law department of that institution, was first mayor of the city of Wheaton and served two terms as judge of Du Page county. For twenty-five years he practiced law in Chicago and retired from practice in 1898 to become president of the Federal Steel company. He was conspicuous in the formation of the United States Steel corporation and on its organization was chosen to fill his present post.

Governor Edward W. Hoch of Kansas, who declares that unless America's great trusts and corporations are controlled in the interests of the people a tidal wave of socialism will sweep over the country, is not only a careful student of sociological matters, but enjoys telling and hearing a good story as well. According to the governor, a friend of his in Topeka who recently became engaged to a charming young girl chanced to be in a department store when his eye caught a glimpse of a jeweled belt that he thought his fiancee would like to have. Going over to the counter, he asked the saleswoman to place an assortment of them on the counters so he could make a better choice.

GOVERNOR EDWARD W. HOCH.

"What size do you wish, sir?" she asked.

"Really, I don't know."

He gazed around the store for a few seconds. Finally he said:

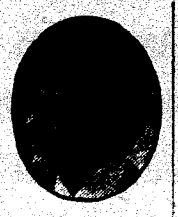
"Can you let me have a yardstick for a moment?"

The saleswoman got him a yardstick, and he placed it on the inside of his arm from the shoulder to the wrist, and in a few moments he exclaimed triumphantly to the surprised saleswoman:

"Twenty inches, please!"

The case of Eben Sumner Draper, Republican candidate for lieutenant governor of Massachusetts in the recent election, presents some unusual aspects. Curtis Guild, Jr., the Republican candidate for governor, who favors a conservative revision of the tariff by the Republicans in congress, was elected by a plurality of 23,116, while his associate on the ticket, Mr. Draper, who has opposed tariff revision, was elected on the face of the returns by a plurality of only 1,996, and the Democrats decided to contest his election.

EBEN S. DRAPER.



Mr. Draper resides in Hopedale, where he was born on June 17, 1858, being the youngest son of George Draper, well known in his time as a manufacturer and the founder of various industrial enterprises. After attending the public and private schools of his native town, Mr. Draper entered the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He was then fifteen. He took a course in engineering and on leaving college began work in machine shops, serving in different departments in various industries until he was twenty-one, when he became a partner in the firm of George Draper & Sons. He is now identified with numerous corporations. He married in 1883 Miss Nannie Bristow, a daughter of the late Benjamin H. Bristow, once secretary of the treasury. Mr. Draper was one of the founders of the famous Home Market club.

Former Governor Bates of Massachusetts tells of a visit he paid one Sunday to a small colored church in Virginia. After the usual services the parson arose and said in a solemn voice:

"We will now hab a few sho't prayers, Brudder Hooper, will yo' kin'ly lead?"

"Ma lead? No, suh! Ah just dealt," answered the brother, half awake and half asleep.

New honors have come to Heinrich Conried, director of the Metropolitan Opera company, for in choosing him to head the proposed National theater the projectors of that enterprise have expressed their confidence in him as a representative of the highest achievements of the dramatic art. The National theater, which is to be built on a site facing Central park, New York, at a cost of $2,000,000, will not be national in the sense that it will receive support from the government, like the Theatre Francais of Paris and the Hofburg theater in Berlin, but it will aim to present only the best productions and maintain a high artistic, moral and literary standard. The contributions of wealthy men to its support will render the institution more independent of popular caprice than ordinary theatrical enterprises.

HEINRICH CONRIED

Mr. Conried is a man of high artistic ambition and varied achievements. He has a sharp wit, and a story is told of how a certain young woman had the temerity to play before him a nocturne that she didn't know at all well. Afterward, as she was taking leave, she said:

"I hope to be perfect in that nocturne the next time we meet."

Conried bowed and laughed.

"Oh," he said, "I hope we meet before that."

H. Rider Haggard's new novel, "Ayesha," appeared recently. The author claims that this is not a sequel to "She," but a conclusion to that remarkable novel. It carries the narrator, Ludwig Horace Holly, and his ward, Leo Vincey, through a series of hair raising adventures in the mountains of central Asia in quest of the ever elusive reincarnated queen.

Indian Summer.

Indian summer is the short spell of warm days in October or November accentuated by the first chill of autumn which has preceded it. Sometimes it lasts as long as a fortnight, and it has been observed to recur twice or thrice in a season, though this is quite rare. An atmospheric phenomenon of the same nature has received the name of "St. Luke's summer" in Germany, "St. Martin's summer" in England, the feasts of these saints being Oct. 18 and Nov. 11 respectively. The name Indian summer is of an unidentified origin. It has been established that it does not appear on any record earlier than 1794, but when first recorded it was as a term in general use. The use of the expression in 1778 by Horace Walpole clearly referred to the torrid summer of the West Indies and not to this pleasant period of the northern autumn.

The Satan of the Greeks.

The Greek conception of the evil one, whom they call Yama, makes that personage one of the most satanic of the whole evil tribe. According to their ideas of him, he is 240 miles high and the hairs on his body stand out like palm trees on a mountain side. He punishes the doomed being submitted to his charge by putting them in beds of boiling oil, sawing their bodies in two, pouring molten lead in their ears and such other little pranks as pulling out their tongues, toe and finger nails and gouging out their eyes. He is a heartless old fiend of the most fiendish kind and has many other exquisite little tortures laid up for the helpless wretch consigned to his "chamber of horrors."

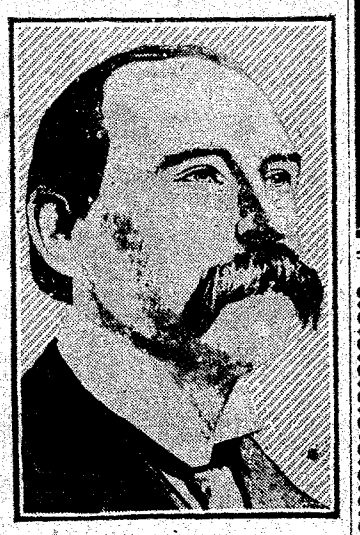
The Cent Is Not Small.

With the exception of the English penny, the cent is the largest minimum unit of money in the civilized world. Roughly speaking, our cent is worth 2 kopecks, 2 cents Mexican, Chinese and East Indian, 2 atts or milliemes. It is two and a half times larger than the cent of the Netherlands or the kreutzer. There are 4 pies, ore, or pfennige to the cent or 5 bani, centesimi, lepta, heller, peunia, centimes or stotinki. A cent is worth 10 paras Turkish or 10 Japanese rin, 11 cash Chinese or 50 paras Servian. What the trolley car conductors of Servia say when tendered a five cent fare in paras would probably not be fit to print.

Madison's Mint Julep Bet.

Among the trees at the edge of the lawn on the right hand side of the house as you face the mountains James Madison built an icehouse. This was in 1809, and it was the first icehouse in Orange county, Va. Ice in summer! His servants were incredulous. And he bet his overseer an iced mint julep on the Fourth of July, against which the latter wagered a wild turkey. Of course Madison won the turkey.—Country Life in America.

Two Loves.



"But, Emma, how can you prefer the plain and shabbily dressed Julius to my elegant and handsome brother?"

"That is quite simple. Your brother is in love with himself, and Julius with me."—Paris Journal.

Dr. Douglas Hyde AND THE Gaelic Revival

THE revival of a dead language is usually no mean task. Those who are seeking to revitalize the ancient Gaelic tongue believe that it is not yet so dead as to make this an impossibility. The arrival in America of Dr. Douglas Hyde, the leading exponent of the movement, has attracted special attention to its aims. Much has already been accomplished in this direction through the enthusiasm of Dr. Hyde and the work of the organizations which have come into existence partly as a result of his exertions. Dr. Hyde is the son of a Protestant clergyman, the Rev. Arthur Hyde, and he himself has studied theology, but instead of preaching the gospel has devoted himself to literature and scholarship and to the work of convincing the Irish people and those in other countries of Irish descent of the value of the tongue in which their forefathers spoke.

Dr. Hyde was educated at Trinity college, Dublin, where in 1884 he took the degree of bachelor of arts after an exceptionally brilliant undergraduate career and where he has since taken additional degrees. Although he won honors in German, French and Italian, it was the Celtic language which most attracted him, and on graduation, instead of making the tour of the continent usually taken by young men of his social position, he traveled extensively in his native province, making a study of the ancient Irish tales, songs and folklore of Connaught. In this way he was drawn into relations of intimacy with the Irish peasantry and came to realize more than ever before the qualities for the expression of emotion and tenderness possessed by the language of the past. In 1889 he published a book of tales in the ancient tongue, entitled "Leabhar Sgeuluighe achta." The praise this received from students of the Gaelic language encouraged him to write "Beside the Fire: Folklore of the Irish Celts," "The Love Songs of Connaught," "Story of Early Irish Literature," "Mediaeval Tales From the Irish" and other works. Some of these books have gone through several editions. In order to encourage the use of the old language of Ireland in both writing and speaking he has written dramas in Gaelic and taken parts in them himself when presented on the stage. Personally he is recognized as a man of great versatility of talent, for he is poet, playwright, critic, actor, divinity student, orator, journalist, historian, linguist, translator, professor, archaeologist, lecturer and folklorist.

DR. DOUGLAS HYDE.

Dr. Hyde is making a tour of the United States and speaking in colleges and before learned societies of various kinds. Owing in large degree to his efforts the movement for the revival of the Gaelic language in Ireland now shows some surprising results. There are two main groups of the Celtic tongue—the Cymric, represented by the Celtic speech of Wales and Brittany, and the Gaelic, formerly more widely spoken, but now represented by the Celtic speech of Ireland, Scotland and the Isle of Man. Scotland, with a population of 4,500,000, has not in the mainland or adjacent islands more than 300,000 persons who speak or understand Gaelic. In Ireland, when the census of 1900 was taken, it was found that out of a population of about 4,500,000 not more than 700,000 could speak Gaelic. This was a decline of 10,000 in ten years. The decline was due in part to the large emigration from the western province, the last foothold of the Gaelic in Ireland. Since then the current has turned. A few years ago most of those who spoke Gaelic in Ireland could neither read it nor write it. The system of education ignored it, and parents, anxious that their children should get on in the world, banished it from their homes. The Gaelic league, of which Dr. Hyde was the first president, has done much to change these conditions. It employs traveling teachers and in many ways encourages the use of the ancient language both in conversation and literature. Interest in the movement has extended to the United States and even to South America. The number of schools in which the Gaelic language is taught has advanced from 105 in 1899 to over 3,000 in 1905, and those who can read, speak and write Gaelic in them constantly increasing.

Red, White, Green Seas.

The colors of pure ocean water and the varying shades observed where impurities are met with are diversified by the coloring effects of the enormous multitudes of various forms of organized life which sometimes mask the natural color of the surface of the sea and tinge extensive areas with remarkable colors. Red appears to be most frequently met with. In the southern parts of the Red sea and in the Arabian gulf large areas are colored blood red by microscopic animalculae, and in the Indian ocean similar forms of life cause, in addition to red, milk white or yellow spots of great extent, the appearance of which is frequently alarming to the ignorant sailor. Off the Guinea coast ships sometimes appear to float in milk. Extensive red streaks are also known to occur in the south Atlantic and south Pacific, which are caused by hosts of small red crustacea. The "Vermilion sea" of California owes its brilliant color to infusoria. Areas colored green have been noted, especially in the arctic regions, which are due to myriads of diatoms, and in some portions of the antarctic seas diatoms of rusty color make the water a dirty brown.

Canaries.

Sometimes a canary's coat gets a pale, sickly yellow. Give him half an ounce of ground red pepper such as is used on your table and let the bird eat it as he likes. In a week he'll turn a beautiful orange color. Bird lice are troublesome at times. A pinch of powdered saffron put under the wings will drive away the pests. Gravel in the cage every day and a dish of tepid water for a bath every other day are indispensable to the singer's health and happiness.

A CHRISTMAS STORY BY EDWARD EVERETT HALE.

[Copyright, ... by American Press Association.]

A gray cold morning, the deck wet, the iron all beaded with frost, all the longshoremen in heavy pea jackets or cardigans, the whole ship in a bustle and the favored first class passengers just leaving.

One sad looking Irish girl stands with her knit hood already spotted with the rime, and you cannot tell whether those are tears which hang from her black eyelashes or whether the fog is beginning to freeze there. What you see is that the poor thing looks right and left and up the pier and down the pier, and that in the whole crowd—they all seem so selfish—she sees nobody. Hundreds of people going and coming, pushing and hauling, and Nora's big brother is not there, as he promised to be and should be.

Mrs. Olstrom, the motherly Swedish woman, who has four children and ten tin cups and a great bed and five trunks and a fatuous, freckless husband, makes time, between cousins and uncles and custom house men and sharpers, to run up every now and then and to say that Nora must not cry, that she must be easy, that she has spoken to the master and the master has said they are three hours earlier than they were expected. And all this was so kindly meant and so kindly said that poor Nora brushed the tears away, if they were tears, and thanked her, though she did not understand one word that dear Mrs. Ohstrom said to her. What is language, or what are words, after all?

And the bright buttoned, daintily dressed little ship's doctor, whom poor Nora hardly knew in his shore finery—he made time to stop and tell her that the ship was too early, and that she must not worry. Father, was it, she was waiting for? "Oh, brother! Oh, he will be sure to be here! Better sit down. Here is a chair. Don't cry. I am afraid you had no breakfast. Take this orange. It will cheer you up. I shall see you again."

Alas! the little doctor was swept away and forgot Nora for a week, and she "was left lamenting."

For one hour went by, and two and three. The Swedish woman went, and the doctor went, and the girl could see the captain go, and the mate that gave them their orders every morning. The custom house people began to go. The cabs and other carriages for the gentry had gone long before.

And poor Nora was left lamenting.

Then was it that that queer Salvation Army girl, with a coal scuttle for a bonnet, came up again. She had smiled pleasantly two or three times before, and had asked Nora to eat a bun. Poor Nora broke down and cried heartily this time. But the other was patient and kind and said just what the others had said. Only she did not go away. And she had the sense to ask if Nora knew where the brother lived.

"Fwhy, of course I do, miss. See, here is the paper."

And the little soldier lass read it: "99 Linwood street, Boston."

"My poor child, what a pity you did not let us see it before!"

Alas and alas! Nora's box was of the biggest. But the army lass flinched at nothing.

An immense wagon, with two giant horses, loaded with the most extraordinary chests which have been seen since the days of the vikings. Piled on the top were many feather beds, and on the top of the feather beds a Scandinavian matron. With Mike, the good natured teamster, who was at once captain and pilot of this craft, the army lass had easily made her treaty, when he was told the story. He was to carry Nora and her outfit to the Linwood street house after he had taken these Swedes to theirs. "And indade it will not be farr, miss. There's a shorrt cut behind Egan's, if indade he did not put up a tinkment house since I was that way." And with new explanations to Nora that all was right, that indeed it was better this way than it would have been had her brother been called from his work, she was lifted, without much consent of her own, to the driver's seat, and her precious "box" was so placed that she could rest her little feet upon it.

Nora had proudly confided to the friendly lass the assurance that she had money, had even shown a crisp $2 bill which had been sent to her for exigencies.

But when the lass made the contract with Mike Dermott the good fellow said he should take Nora and her box for the love of County Cork. "Indeed, indeed, I don't take money from the like of her."

And so they started, with the Swedish [illegible] walking on one side of the cart with their rifles, keeping a good lookout for buffaloes and red Indians and grizzly bears, as men landing in a new country which they were to civilize. More sailing, for there was the ferry to cross to old Boston. Much waiting, for there was a broken down coal wagon in Salutation alley. Long conference between Nora and Mike, in which he did all the talking and she all the listening, as to home rule and Mr. McCarthy, and what O'Brien thought of this and what Cunniff thought of that. Then an occasional question came in Swedish from the matron above their heads and was followed by a reply in Celtic English from Mike, each wholly ignorant of the views or wishes of the others. And occasionally the escort of riflemen, after some particular attack of chaff, in words which they fortunately did not understand, looked up to their matron, controller and director, exchanged words with her and then studied the pavement again for tracks of buffalo. A long hour of all this, the stone and brick of the city giving away to green trees between the houses as they come to Dorchester.

Poor Nora looks right and looks left, hoping to meet her big brother. She begins to think she shall remember him. Everybody else looks so different from Fermoy that he must look like home.

But there is no brother.

There is at last a joyful cry as the Swedish matron and the riflemen recognize familiar faces. And Mike smiles gladly and brings round the stout bays with a twitch, so that the end of the cart comes square to the sidewalk. Somebody produces a stepladder, and the Swedish matron, with her birdcage in her hand, descends in triumph. Much kissing, much shaking of hands, much thanking of God, more or less reverent. Then the cords are cut, beds flung down, the giant boxes lifted, the sons of Anak only know how. The money covenanted for is produced and paid, and Mike mounts lightly to Nora's side.

"And now, Nora, my child, wherr is the paper? For in two minutes we'll soon be therr, now that this rubbish is landed."

And he read on the precious paper, "John McLaughlin, 99 Linwood street."

Strange to say, the paper said just what it had said two hours before.

"And now, my dear child, we will be therr in ten minutes, if only we can cross back of Egan's."

And although they could not cross back of Egan's, for Egan had put up a "tinkment" house since Mike had passed that way, yet in ten minutes Linwood street had been found, No. 99 at last revealed itself, between Nos. 7 and 3—a great six story wooden tinder box, with clotheslines mysterious behind, open doors in front, long passages running through, three doors on each side of a passage, and the wondering heads of 11 women who belonged to five different races and spoke in six different languages appearing from their 11 windows, as Mike and Nora and the two boys all stopped at one and the same moment at the door.

Mike was already anxious about his time, for he was to be at the custom house an hour away or more, at 11 sharp. But he selected a certain Widow Flynn from the 11 white capped women, he explained to her briefly that John McLaughlin was to be found, he told Nora for the thirty-seventh time that all was right, and that she must not cry, he looked at his watch again, rather anxiously, mounted his box, and drove swiftly away.

He was the one thread which bound Nora to this world. And this thread broke before her eyes.

Mrs. Flynn affected to be cheerful. But she was not cheerful. Mrs. Flynn was a prominent person in her sodality. And well she knew that if any John McLaughlin in those parts were expecting any sister from home she should know him and where he lived. Well she knew, also, that John McLaughlin, the mason, was born in Glasgow; that John McLaughlin, who is on the city work, had all his family around him, and, most distinct of all, she knew that no McLaughlin, sisterless or many sistered, lived in this beehive which she lived in, though it were 99 Linwood street. Into her own cell of that beehive, however, she took poor, sad, desolate Nora. Into the hallway she bade the loafing neighbor boys bring Nora's trunk; in a language Nora could hardly understand she explained to her that all would be well as soon as the policeman passed by. She sent Mary Murphy, who happened to be at home from school, for a pint of milk, and so compelled Nora to drink a cup of tea and to eat a biscuit and a dropped egg, while they waited for the policeman.

Of course he knew of seven John McLaughlins. He even went to the drug store and looked in the Boston Directory to find that there were there the names of 61 more. But not one of them lived in Linwood street, as they all knew already. All the same, Nora was charged not to cry, to drink more tea and eat more bread and butter. The "cop" said he would look in on three of the Johns whom he knew, and intelligent boys now returning from school were sent to the homes of the other four to interrogate them as to any expected sister. Within an hour, now nearly 1 o'clock, answers were received from all the seven. No one of them expected chick or child from Fermoy.

But the "cop" had a suggestion to make. His pocket list of names of streets revealed another Linwood street—in Roxbury; not this one in Dorchester. Be it known to unlearned readers, who in snug shelter in Montana follow along this little tale, that Roxbury and Dorchester are both parts of that large municipality called Boston. Though no John McLaughlin was in the directory for 99 Linwood street, Roxbury, was not that the objective? Poor Nora was questioned as to Roxbury. She was sure she never heard of it.

But the clew was too good to be lost, and the authority of the friendly "cop" was too great to be resisted. He telephoned to the central office that Nora McLaughlin, just from Ireland, had been found, in a fashion, but that no one knew where to put her. Then he stopped a milkman from Braintree, who delivered afternoon milk for invalids.

Was he not going through Roxbury?

Of course he was.

Would he not take this lost child to 99 Linwood street?

Of course he would. Milkmen, from their profession, have hearts warm toward children.

Well, if he were to take her, he had better take her trunk too.

To which illogical proposal the milkman acceded—on the afternoon route there is so much less milk to take than there is in the morning.

So Nora was lifted into the milk wagon. In tears she kissed good Mrs. Flynn. The boys and girls assembled to bid her goodby, and even she had a hope for a few moments that her troubles were at an end.

At 99 Linwood street, Roxbury, they were preparing for the Review club.

The Review club met once a fortnight at half past 2 o'clock at the house of one or another of the members. They first arranged the male details of the business. Then the hostess read, or made some one read, the scraps which seemed most worthy in the reviews and magazines of the last issues, and at 4 the husbands and brothers and neighbors generally dropped in, and "You are sure you have cream enough, Ellen?"

"Oh, yes, mum."

"All kinds of tea, you know, that which the Chinese gentleman sent, and be sure of the chocolate for Mrs. Bunce."

"Indeed yes, mum."

"And let me know just before you bring up the hot water." Doorbell rings. "There is Mrs. Walter now!"

No, it wasn't Mrs. Walter. She came three minutes after. But before she came, Howells, the milkman, had lifted Nora from her seat. As the snow fell fast on the doorsteps, he carried her carefully up to the door and even by the time Ellen answered the bell, he had the heavy chest, dragging it over the snow by the stout rope at one end.

Ellen was amazed to find this group instead of Mrs. Walter. She called her mistress, who heard Howells' realistic story with amazement—not to say amusement.

"You poor dear child!" she cried at once. "Come in where it is dry! John McLaughlin? No, indeed! Who can John McLaughlin be? Ellen, what is Mike's last name?"

Mike was the choreman, who made the furnace fire, and kept the sidewalk.

"Mike's name, mum? I don't know, mum. Mary will know, mum."

And for the moment Ellen disappeared to find Mary.

"Never mind, never mind. Come in, you poor child. You were very good to bring her, Mr. Howells, very good indeed. We will take care of her. Is it going to storm?"

Mr. Howells thought it was going to storm and turned to go away. At that moment Mrs. Walter arrived, the first comer of the Review club. And Nora's new hostess had to turn to her guests, while Ellen in the last cares for the afternoon table had to comfort Nora by spasms. It was left for Margaret, the chambermaid, to pump out—or to screw out, as you choose—the details of the story, from the poor frightened waif, who seemed more estray than ever.

John McLaughlin? No. Nobody knew anything about him. The last choreman was named McManus, but he went to Ottawa three years ago!

And while the different facts and doubts were canvassed in the kitchen, up stairs they settled the Bulgarian question, the origin of the natives of Tasmania and the last questions about realism.

Only the mind of the lady of the house returned again and again to questions as to the present residence of John McLaughlin.

For in spite of the gathering snow and the prospect of more, the members of the Review club had followed fast on Mrs. Walters and gathered in full force.

The hostess, though somewhat preoccupied, was courteous and ready.

Only the functions of the club, as they went forward, would be occasionally interrupted. Thus she would read aloud "as in her private duty bound"—

"The peasantry were excited, but were held in check by promises from Stambuloff. The emissaries of the czar"—

"Mr. Goodspeed, would you mind reading on? Here is the place. I see my postman pass the window."

And so, moving quickly to the front door, she interviewed the faithful Harrington, dressed, heaven knows why, in Confederate uniform of gray. For Harrington had served his four years on the loyal side. Four times a day did Harrington with his letter bag renew the connection of this household with the world and other worlds.

"Dear Mr. Harrington, I thought you could tell us. Here is a girl named Nora McLaughlin, and here is her trunk, both left at the door by the milkman, and we do not know anything about where she belongs."

"Insufficient address?" asked Harrington professionally.

"Exactly. All she knows is that her brother is named John."

"A great many of them are," said Harrington, already writing on his memorandum book, and in his memory fixing the fact that a large two legged living parcel, insufficiently addressed, had been left at the wrong door for John McLaughlin; also a trunk, too large for delivery by the penny post.

"I will tell the other men, and if I was you I would send to the police."

"Would you mind telling the first officer you meet? I hate to send my girls out." And so she returned to Bulgaria.

But Bulgaria was ended, and Mr. Conover handed her an article on "Antarctic Discovery." She was again reading:

"Under these circumstances Captain Wilkes, who had collected a boatload of stones from the front of the glacier, when she gave back The Forum to Mr. Conover, "Would you mind going on just a minute?" she said and ran out to meet the ice cream man. So soon as he had left his tins she said:

"Mr. Fridge, would you mind stopping at the Dudley school as you go home and telling Miss Lougee that there is a lost girl here?" etc.

Good Mr. Fridge was most eager to help, and the hostess returned, took the book again and read on with "the temperature, as they observed it, was 99 degrees C.; but, as the alcohol in their tins was frozen at the moment, there seemed reason to suspect the correctness of this observation."

And a shiver passed over the Review club.

Thus far the powers of confusion and error seemed to have been triumphant over poor Nora, or such was the success of that power who uses these agencies, if the reader prefer to personify him.

But the time had come to turn his left flank and to attack his forces in the rear, for the postman now took the field—that is to say, Harrington, good fellow, finished his third delivery, four good miles and nine-tenths of a furlong, snow two inches deep, three, four, six, before he was done, and then returned to his branch office to report.

"Two legged parcel, insufficient address; 99 Linwood street! Jim, What ever come to that letter that went to 99 Linwood street with insufficient address six weeks ago?"

"Linwood street? Insufficient address? Foreign letter? Why, of course, you know went back to the central office."

"I guessed it did," said Harrington grimly, "so I must go there too."

This meant that after Harrington had gone his rounds again on delivery route No. 6, four more miles, and nine-tenths more of a furlong, 315 doorbells and only 73 slit boxes, snow now ranging from 6 inches to 12 on the sidewalks and breast deep where there was a chance for drifting, when all this was well done so that Harrington had no more duties to Uncle Sam, he could take Nora McLaughlin's waif in hand, and thus defeat the princes of evil.

Blind letter clerks all here. Insufficient delivery men both here. Chief of returned bureau here. All summoned to the foreign office as Harrington tells his story. Indexes produced, ledgers, journals, day-books and private passbooks. John McLaughlin's biography followed out on 67 of the different avatars in which his personality has been manifested under that name. False trail here—clew breaks there—scent fails here, but at last—a joyful cry from Will Search:

"Here you are! Insufficient address. Nov. 1. Queenstown letter—Linwood, to John McLaughlin. Try Dorchester. Try Roxbury. Try East Boston. Try Somerville'—and there it stops, and was not returned."

"Try Somerville!"

In these words great light fell over the eager circle. Not because Somerville is the seat of an insane hospital. No! But because it is not in the Boston Directory.

If you please, Somerville is one independent city, and so, unless John McLaughlin worked in Boston, if he lived in Somerville, he would not be in the Boston Directory.

Not much! Somerville has its own seven John McLaughlins besides those Boston ones.

"I say, Harry, Tom, Dick—somebody fetch Somerville Directory!"

Dick flew and returned with the book.

"Here you be! 'John McLaughlin, laborer, 99 Linwood street!'"

"Victory!"

Satan's forces tremble, and as the different officers return to their desks "even the ranks of Tuscany" in that well bred office "can scarce forbear to cheer."

As for Harrington, he bids goodby, wraps his tartan around him and is out in the snow again. Where Linwood street is he "knows no more than the dead." But somebody will know.

Somerville car. Draw of bridge open. Man falls into the river and has to be rescued. Draw closes. Snow drift at Margin street. Shovels. Drift open. Center of Somerville. Apothecary's shop open. "Please, where is Linwood street?"

"Take your second left, cross three or four streets, turn to the right by the water pipe, take the third right, go down hill by the schoolhouse and take second left, and you come out at 11 Linwood street."

All which Harrington does. He experiences one continual burst of joy that his route does not take him through these detours daily. But his professional experience is good for him. We have no need to describe his false turns. Even unlaced would have been useless in that snow. At last, just as the Somerville bells rings for 9 o'clock, Harrington also rings triumphant at the door of the little five roomed cottage, where his lantern has already revealed the magic number "99."

Ring! as for a gilt edged special delivery!

Door thrown open by a solid man with curly red hair, unshaven since Sunday, in his shirt sleeves and with kerosene lamp in his hand.

"Are you John McLaughlin?"

"Indade I am; the same."

"And where's your sister Nora?"

The good fellow, who had been stern before, broke down. "And indade I was saying to Ellen it's an awful night for 'em

"ARE YOU JOHN M'LAUGHLIN?"

all in the gale off the coast in the ship. The holy Virgin and the good God take care of 'em!"

"They have taken care of them," said Harrington reverently. "The ship is safe in dock, and your sister Nora is in Roxbury, at 99 Linwood street."

And a broad grin lighted his face as he spoke the words.

There was joy in every bed and at every door of the five rooms. Then John hastily donned coat, cardigan and ulster. He persuaded Harrington to drink a cup of red hot tea which was brewing on the stove. While the good fellow did so, and ate a St. Anne's bun, which Mrs. McLaughlin produced in triumph, John was persuading Hermann Gross, the expressman, next door, to put the gray into a light pung he had for special delivery. By the time Harrington went to the door two lanterns were flitting about in the snow piled yard behind the two houses.

Harrington assisted in yoking the gray. In five minutes he and John were defying the gale as they sped across the silent bridge, bound south to Roxbury. Poor little Nora was asleep in the parlor on the sofa. She had begged and begged that she need not be put to bed, and by her side her protector sat reading about the antarctic. But of a sudden Harrington reappeared!

Is it Santa Claus?

Indeed it is! Beard, hat, coat, all white with snow!

And Santa Claus has come for the best present he will deliver that evening!

Dear little Nora is wrapped in sealskins and other skins, muffs and astrakhan rugs. She has a hot brick at her feet, and Pompey, the dog, is made to lie over them, so John McLaughlin No. 68 takes her in triumph to 99 Linwood street.

That was a Christmas to be remembered! And Christmas morning, after church, the Brothers of St. Patrick, which was the men's society, and the Sodality of St. Anne's, which was the women's, determined on a great twelfth night feast to celebrated Nora's return.

It was to show "how these brethren love one another."

They proposed to take the rink. People didn't use it for skating in winter as much as in summer.

Nora was to receive with her, John McLaughlin and his wife to assist. Brother 74, John McLaughlins were to act as ushers.

The Salvation Army came first, led by the lass who found Michael.

Sincere by Nature.

The physician has methods by which he determines whether or not a patient is shamming. Other people have different methods, which may sometimes be as successful as the doctor's.

"Do you believe that was freal faint of Sally Ann's, or do you think she just shammed so's to look interesting to Willy Lane and make him offer to take her home in his buggy?" asked one of the participants in a recent picnic.

"It wa'n't any sham on Sally Ann's part," said Mrs. Ricketts, to whom the appeal was made. "I should think when you know Sally Ann wears sixes and that she lay there with her feet sticking right straight up for everybody to see for nearly fifteen minutes you'd realize that 'twasn't any make believe faint."

The Kissing Ball.

A green ball to suspend over the Christmas dinner table is made by fastening two keg hoops together, one within the other, turning each way like an open globe. Twine princess pine around each hoop and put in sprigs of holly here and there. This indeed is similar to the old "kissing bunch," which is seen in many old fashioned homes in England. Two wooden hoops, one passing through the other, decked with evergreens, in the center of which is hung a "crown" of rosy apples and a sprig of mistletoe. Beneath it there are much kissing and romping and the carol singers stand beneath it and sing their songs.—Selected.

A Turkey's Lament.

Ah, distinctly I remember—
It was only last November
That they chased me through the back yard
And across the old barn floor!
Valiantly and well I fought me
Till at last the villains caught me
And proceeded then to trot me
To the ax beside the door;
But, ashamed, they let me go, for
I was bones and nothing more—
Skin and bones and nothing more.

Now, I see it is December,
And no doubt they will dismember
Me, for all my fatter friends
Have gone to that other shore;
I've grown pale from apprehension,
For of late some marked attention
Makes me think it's their intention
To cut off my legs and serve me
As a reedbird from the store—
Just a reedbird, nothing more!

How General Butler Lost a Horse.

While in front of Petersburg General Butler received information that his favorite horse, Almond Eye, had been accidentally killed by falling into a ravine. Upon the departure of his informant he ordered an Irish servant to go and skin him.

"What, is Almond Eye dead?" asked Pat.

"What's that to you? Do as I bid you and ask no questions."

Pat went about his business and in an hour or two returned.

"Well, Pat, where have you been all this time?" sternly demanded the general.

"Skinning the horse, yer honor."

"Does it take nearly two hours to perform such an operation?"

"No, yer honor, but then, you see, it tuck bout half an hour to catch him," replied Pat.

General Butler cast upon his servant such a ferocious look that Pat thought he meditated skinning an Irishman in revenge for the death of his horse.

Value of Butterflies.

When our juniors see the common white cabbage and sulphur wing butterflies or even the superb Monarch and gorgeous Ajax swallowtails flitting through the fields or at times city streets they perhaps never give thought to the fact that butterflies may be of commercial value. But such is the case. Some of our domestic butterflies on account of rarity more than beauty command prices from one to several dollars, which collectors gladly pay to insure the completeness of their cabinets. Big prices are paid for some of the magnificent butterflies of the morpho and papilio genera, which are rainbow hued in colors and span five feet in wings. These flourish in tropical countries, and it is often necessary for museums to send out special expeditions for them. They range from $10 to $100 in value.—Baltimore Herald.

Haddock Marks.

Why do haddocks carry those peculiar black "finger marks" near the head? Some tell us that they are a memento of the pressure of St. Peter's fingers when he went fishing for the tribute money. On the Yorkshire coast of England they say the devil once determined to build a bridge at Filey. His Satanic majesty did not start the bridge for the convenience of the people, but for the destruction of ships and sailors and the annoyance of fishermen in general. In the progress of his work Old Nick dropped his hammer into the sea. Snatching at it hastily, he caught a haddock, and all haddocks carry the imprint of his black fingers to this day.

Christmas Changes.

The Yule log has given place to the steam radiator, the furnace register and the base burning heater, but we who are warmed by any of these means on Christmas eve are quite as likely to enjoy Christmas as were our forefathers and foremothers, who used to celebrate its festivities when gathered about the old time fireplaces. There have been changes in heating apparatus, but human nature and Christmas remain as they were and will probably so remain after the present apparatus has been displaced by electric heaters. We grumble about our furnaces, our radiators and our stoves and will probably grumble about our electric heaters, but in Yule log times our ancestors were often roasted on one side and frozen on the other.

Christmas Stockings.

A street urchin stood peering into the window of a toyshop one evening just before Christmas watching a prosperous father buying presents. Bigger and bigger the boy's eyes grew as the purchasing went on. Finally, when it was all over and the man left the store, the lad sidled up to him and with great diffidence asked:

"Wuz all them things you bought fer one boy, mister?"

"Why, yes, certainly," said the man impatiently as he turned away with the bundles under his arms.

The street boy's eyes grew bigger yet.

"Geo whiz!" he whispered under his breath. "Rich men's boys must wear awful big stockings!"

Curran in the Coffee House.

John Philpot Curran, the famous Irish lawyer, ranks among the wittiest men the Emerald Isle has ever produced. His wit, however, was sometimes turned against himself by the intended victim, the following story, taken from the volume of biographical reminiscences entitled "Mrs. Brookfield and Her Circle," furnishing an amusing example of how Curran was once outdone:

A brisk young widow in some part of Ireland used to preside at the table of a coffeehouse patronized by Curran. Her name was Honor, and one day there was some disputed charge.

Curran slyly winked at the friend who happened to be dining with him and proposed "honor and honesty."

"By all means," added the widow briskly, holding her glass to be filled, "let us drink to Mr. Curran's absent friends."

When two of them, taste and smell, having been impaired if not utterly destroyed, by Nasal Catarrh, are fully restored by Ely's Cream Balm, can you doubt that this remedy deserves all that has been said of it by the thousands whom it has cured? ARMENIAN CHRISTMASES.

One of the Persecuted Race Tells of Observances and Customs of His People.

It is not as easy to describe the customs of the Armenian people in their celebration of Christmas as it would be to tell of the English or the American ways of celebrating, because the customs of my people differ according to their habitat. Scattered as the Armenians are from Constantinople and other cities to the little villages in Asia Minor, there are many observances that are almost purely local. Some of these, however, are extremely interesting.

To begin, Christmas is not observed on the same day with us as it is here, for there is a difference of 12 days in the calendar, as everybody knows. So our Christmas falls on your Jan. 6. Coming, as it does, so near New Year's day, it is not so much of a social occasion as it probably would be otherwise, but as a religious festival it ranks with Easter, and the two days are the principal feasts of the year.

The religious services are most impressive. Our churches differ from yours in some ways, for there are no pews in them, and we adorn them as richly as we are able to do. The principal service on Christmas day is a sort of high mass that is celebrated before daybreak. Everybody who is able to do so goes to this mass, at which the highest church dignitary in the neighborhood always officiates. If there is an archbishop near, he is the one; if not, it is the bishop. And everybody wears his very best clothes. It is a general custom to give the children a new suit of clothes if possible on Christmas. If the parents cannot afford so much, they will at least contrive to give some article of dress, if it is only a pair of new shoes.

This has led to another custom which is in vogue especially in Constantinople, where the Armenian children are all educated in our parochial schools. These schools are located in the churchyards and are, of course, supported by the churches. Some of the children are very poor, and a collection is always taken up at the Christmas service in the church for the purpose of buying new clothes for the children whose parents cannot clothe them properly. There is one very benevolent gentleman, a merchant in Constantinople, whom I know very well, who always buys a great number of suits at Christmas—from 20 to 60 or 70, according to what he can afford.

The making of presents at Christmas is not perhaps as general among our people as it is here, though in the cities we are rapidly adopting European customs. Presents are given, but most frequently by superiors to their inferiors or by elders to children.

After the church services the people greet one another with a special salutation. One says, "Christ is born," and the reply is, "Blessed is the birth of Christ." This is as they return to their homes from church.

Later in the day there is a general interchange of visits, much like the fashion of New Year's calls, which is still kept up in some parts of this country, though with this difference: It is deemed almost obligatory for inferiors to call on superiors, and for the younger members of the community to call on the elder. There is, of course, no law about this, but if an employer, for example, should not receive a call from each of his employees, he would feel that his dignity had not been properly respected, and the employes would feel that he had been rude, to say the least. I remember that my father used to receive me severely if I failed to call on any one who had a right to expect a visit from me.

When the visitor arrives at the house of the person he is calling on, he is received according to his station. If he is a dependent or a servant or hired man, he may very likely receive a small present of money; perhaps only as much as 25 cents, or perhaps $5 or $10, or he may, especially in the country, receive food or clothing. If he is a social equal, he will be entertained with arrack and fruits and sweets. Fruits are much used, too, for trifling gifts.

I should say that the greeting on entering the house on one of these visits is similar to the morning salutation. The guest says, "Christ is born and made manifest to us," and the reply is, "Blessed are the birth and the manifestation of Christ."

One custom is worth mentioning. The smaller boys in each village go out in parties on Christmas day, carrying bags, and go from house to house singing a sort of Christmas carol or song about the birth of Christ. I cannot recall the exact words, but it tells the old story and has a refrain: "Good tidings! Good tidings!"

They go on the roofs of the houses, for the houses of the villagers are almost underground, and the roofs are easily reached, and as they sing they let the bags down in front of the doors, and the people put in them whatever they feel disposed to give. Sometimes it will be a little money, and sometimes it will be something the boys can easily sell for money to have a good time with, and sometimes it will be some kind of trash put in for fun, but everybody is good natured.

Christmas among my people is hardly what it is here, but the spirit of the day is the same, and perhaps it is only poverty that makes the difference.

Post-Christmas "Lines."

[After Stephen Crane.]

It was the morning after Christmas and the boy was breaking toys.
I begged him to desist and come out into the sunshine,
But he—he wrinkled his face. And he cried,
"No, I will not come!"
And continued his work of destruction.

The True Christmas Spirit.

The best Christmas gift that any one can give to the world is the manifestation of a spirit of mutual confidence, consideration and helpfulness. Wherever and whenever that spirit supplants the unlovely trait of warring individual greed, the good seed is sown again to multiply in other minds.

Remember the Poor.

Every man who prepares for Christmas with the knowledge that his own children are fed and clothed and can enjoy the festivity of the season should mark his gratitude for good fortune with a contribution to prevent others from passing that holiday in cold and hunger.

A Christmas Eve Idyl.

The hour was late; the lights burned low
The fire but half dispelled the gloom;
A youth and maid, with cheeks aglow,
Sat silent in the room.

'Twas Christmas eve, and half in jest
They would not say good night, because They'd vowed to watch and do their best
To see old Santa Claus.

Slow ticked the clock; they said no word;
The solemn midnight hour drew near,
And still no telltale sound was heard
Of Santa coming near.

Twelve struck; and then, all suddenly,
A guest came in, surprised the pair;
It was not Santa Claus, not he,
But Cupid that stood there!

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM

CHRISTIAN BENEVOLENCE.

IF THERE is one feature of our modern civilization which more than another distinguishes it over all former periods, it is the enlarged sympathy with which the wealthy and the cultured regard their poorer and less fortunate fellow men and women. It is undeniable that much of this is the direct effect of Christian teaching and culture, and though men doubtless acted the part of the good Samaritan before Jesus proclaimed his message of peace and good will on earth, there are but few who would feel disposed to deny that the active benevolence so characteristic of our times is the direct outcome of that event, which is now being celebrated all over the world.

Though charity is a duty which should not be limited by times and seasons, still the bounty of the most benevolent should be more freely dispensed on the occasion of the commemoration of the birth of him who first inculcated the universal brotherhood of man and chose for his companions not the cultured and wealthy, but the poor and humble and illiterate of the earth. "The poor ye have always with you," said he of Nazareth. Christians will best follow their Divine examplar's footsteps by seeing even beneath the beggar's gabardine a human heart that may be stimulated by their aid and sympathy into hope and a higher realization of life and its duties.

MERRY XMAS.

A Titled Street Musician.

On Christmas day a few years ago, while traversing Cheapside, London, I saw a group of persons standing on the sidewalk, listening with apparent great interest to the merry strains of a hand organ mounted on wheels. The instrument was played by a pretty faced, well dressed female, and a pale faced, handsome young man went around the crowd, hat in hand, soliciting the charity of those present. An inscription on the organ, stating that Viscount Hinton was forced by adverse circumstances to adopt this means of securing subsistence for his wife and himself, explained the presence of the crowd and the interest manifested in the performance. After bestowing my dole, I inquired how a man of his rank became reduced to such straits. He very affably and in the choicest language informed me that since his father's third marriage he had failed to make any provision for him, and having no profession he adopted street organ playing as a means of procuring a living. He added further that he was hopeful his father would relent, if not out of regard for his son at least to save the family from disgrace. Earl Paulet, the father, a short time afterward secured an injunction prohibiting his son from the use of the offensive announcement on his hand organ. I am not aware whether Viscount Hinton continued his perambulations as a street musician after this injunction, so damaging to his vocation, was enforced.

The Boar's Head.

The queen still has the baron of beef roasted—a whole side of beef; and the boar's head—relic of the days when taxes were paid in boars' and wolves' heads instead of money—still graces her table also. The custom of carrying in the boar's head in state is kept up. At Queen's college, Oxford, the dish is also served. The legend is told that while a student of the college was walking in Shotover forest, studying Aristotle, he was suddenly attacked by a wild boar. He stuffed his book down the animal's throat, shouting "Graecumest!" and ever since his courage and presence of mind have been commemorated.

A CHRISTMAS TURKEY.

How an Old Tar Comes Near Being Cooked For Dinner.

"I never think of Christmas turkeys without rememberin the time I come near to bein' the turkey myself," said an aged sailor to the group of seamen who surrounded him as he sat upon the end of an old spar on South street, New York.

The ancient mariner's name was Jack Brown, and as he had followed the sea as man and boy for over 50 years and had cruised in every part of the world the group listened in respectful silence, well knowing that when old Jack Brown started to spin a yarn it was sure to be well worth hearing.

"It was away back in 1840, and I was little more than a youngster then—only about 18. I had bunked aboard the Jolly Rover, but, mates, she didn't prove to be what her name indicated. We left this port for Melbourne, weathered Cape Horn as safe from Davy Jones' locker as a mountain a mile inland, and all was smooth goin until we were a week's sail into the South Pacific. Then a storm struck us that sent us scuddin along under bare poles like a Mother Carey's chicken afore a cyclone.

"I've run afore many a gale, mates, but that hurricane could give points to any of 'em. One minute the Jolly Rover would plunge out of sight into a big wave, and the next she would seem to be perched like the ark on a Mount Ararat of water. The gale blew nearly all night without a moment's pause. All we could do was to let her run. Suddenly she struck with a shock that made every timber creak. I was below, but I rushed on deck, expectin the ship would go down. An instant later a big wave came over the rail, washed me overboard and swept me on and on. I kept my head above water part of the time, every moment expectin to be dashed agin the rocks. To my joy, I was washed up on a sandy beach. Luckily I had strength enough left to get up and run inland a few feet before the next wave caught me.

"Day was just breakin, and as I looked around I saw Captain Stout, Second Mate Bill Fry and Jim English crawlin out of a big wave and helped 'em up the beach.

"'Look!' yells Fry, shakin the water from his eyes. 'There she goes!'

"As we glanced in the direction of the Jolly Rover she staggered like some gigantic animal with a mortal wound and sank beneath the waves. We watched the beach for an hour, but not another man came ashore. Every Jack Tar of 'em was drowned. Then we started inland to explore the place. We didn't feel at all at ease, mates, because Captain Stout figured as how we must be on one of the smallest of the Solomon islands, which we knew was inhabited by the toughest lot of cannibals and head hunters in the Pacific.

"We realized that we were dead men if we were captured, and we kept a sharp lookout for the cannibals while we were takin in the lay of the land. We saw many cocoanut and breadfruit trees, but the island was apparently uninhabited. I say apparently because about half an hour after we landed a dozen ugly, tattooed savages leaped upon us from the bushes. I knocked one of 'em off his legs before a big warclub brought me to the grass, and Stout, Fry and English had no better luck. The savages were armed with clubs, bows and arrows and bone pointed spears, and their hair was thick and bushy and was stuck full of sticks for hairpins.

"We were all bound hand and foot, and then the savages carried us to a village near by, where we were thrown into a hut and guarded by two big black fellows armed with clubs.

"'Mates,' says English, 'did you notice what was hangin up agin the hut next to us?' We all said, 'No.' 'Well,' says he, 'it was the flesh of human bein's, and, as Captain Stout feared, these fellers with clubs is cannibals.'

"'If they are, our goose is cooked, and—and so are we,' the captain says with a hollow sort of a laugh. 'Blast my eyes,' he says, 'if tomorrow ain't Christmas day too! Perhaps these blacks are goin to have us help 'em make their turkey dinner a success.' We all shuddered, and Jack Brown for one thought he had seen New York for the last time. We lay in the hut all day and the followin night. The savages fed us very well, and while we enjoyd the mess we couldn't help thinkin that the black villains were givin it to us to make us more fat and eatable. Next mornin we heard a great yellin and poundin of tamtams, and Fry, who could look through a crack in the hut, said that a big party of blacks had just returned from somewhere in large war canoes and had with 'em a dozen native prisoners.

"'It looks,' says Fry, 'as if our captors have been makin war on another tribe that lives in this village. The prisoners they have with 'em evidently got away when the village was attacked, but were chased inland and captured.'

"Fry's guess proved correct, and we soon found that our captors did not live on the island, but on another large one about five miles away. Just after sunrise Christmas day we were loaded into big, handsomely carved war canoes along with the dozen native prisoners, and the savages paddled across a wide channel to their own island. On the shore was a native village, and about 1,000 dancin, yellin drum beatin blacks of both sexes welcomed the return of the war canoes, loaded down as they were with Christmas turkeys.

"Well, mates, the savages carried us up the beach a short distance and dropped us near an ugly idol 20 feet high. Several hundred fires were built near by, and then most of the savages gathered in a circle around the idol. Pretty soon a dozen of the tallest blacks, all armed with long, sharp spears, danced around the idol to the music of a hundred tamtams, and then they ranged the dozen native prisoners in a line facin the idol and speared the poor blacks through and through.

"I won't describe the horrible scene that followed, except to say that we lay there expectin every minute would be our last and saw the cannibals cook and devour their victims.

"'They're savin us for dessert,' says the captain.

"But they didn't save us long. In a very few minutes the 12 big savages were leadin us toward the idol, and we were sayin goodby to one another. Death seemed very near when suddenly we heard the boom of a dozen cannon. An instant later shells exploded right and left among the cannibals, killin scores of them. The remainder took one look at the British man-o'-war, lyin in the channel half a mile away, and then fled, panic stricken.

"We sailors were soon tackin for the beach with every sail drawin, you can bet, and when the warship's boats picked us up Jack Brown for one was heartily thankin heaven he'd saved his wishbone!"

CHRISTMAS AT KENO.

How Hard Luck Hankins' Tree Was Decorated.

"Speakin of Christmas trees," said Cyclone Murphy as he snuffed a candle on the topmost twig of the Keno Gulch Sunday school tree with his trusty six shooter and then nipped remonstrance in the bud by getting the drop on the Sunday school superintendent, "reminds me of a galoot named Hard Luck Hankins, who lived up on Tenderfoot ridge and who was the biggest kicker that ever kicked. This yere Hard Luck Hankins lived in a cabin on top of the ridge and p'tended ez how he was a miner, but he didn't never seem to mine anything and was ginerally regarded ez a feller without visible means of support. Some folks said he was a road agent and others opined ez how hoss stealin might be the mine he was workin.

"The only thing Keno Gulch ever really knowed him to be doin was puttin up a powerful kick about one thing er another. He allers had some hard luck story to tell, and that was why folks called him Hard Luck Hankins.

"There wasn't a decent lookin tree on top of the hull ridge except one, and that tree was a mighty handsome pine that stood right in front of Hard Luck Hankins' shanty. 'She's my old Christmas tree,' Hankins would growl every time Christmas come around, 'but, dern her ole hide, Santy Claws don't never hang nothin on her for me.'

"That was jes' Hard Luck's pesky and onery way—allers kickin about somethin—and that handsome tree never havin anything hangin on it fer him seemed to rile him especially every year. 'What's the use havin a blame Christmas tree that never don't have nothin hangin on to it?' he'd growl. 'Have a dern good notion to cut her down!'

"This went on year after year, and the boys kep' a-wonderin and a-wonderin how Hard Luck got a livin. One Christmas eve they found out, and it put an end to Hard Luck's quarrel with his big pine Christmas tree.

"Fer the very first Christmas sence Hard Luck had been livin in Keno there was somethin hangin on his Christmas tree.

"What was it?" repeated Cyclone Murphy as he snuffed another candle. "Why, it was old Hard Luck Hankins hisself, and he was—kickin—ez—usual, and kickin with both feet."—Selected.

Christmas Table Decoration.

A very pretty decoration for the table at the Christmas dinner is a tiny Christmas tree. Candied fruits and gilded and silvered walnuts make it bright and seasonable, while a little frosting with the powder that comes for the purpose makes it a beautiful object under the glitter of the lights. The tree will be trimmed and prepared for you by any florist and should be planted in a fancy low vase or dish. The picturesque dwarf evergreens that come from Japan are most effective when used in this way, and yet they are such costly treasures that few who own them are willing to make table decorations of them.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Last Long Sleep.

Familiarity with death is apt to alter one's earliest conceptions of it. Two ideas are very generally accepted which experience shows to be false. One is that the dying usually fear death and the other that the act of dying is accompanied by pain. It is well known to all physicians that when death is near its terrors do not seem to be felt by the patient. Unless the imagination is stimulated by the frightful portrayal of the supposed "pangs of death" or of the sufferings which some believe the soul must endure after dissolution it is rare indeed that the last days or hours of life are passed in dread.

Most sick persons are very, very tired. Sleep—long, quiet sleep—is what they want. I have seen many people die. I have never seen one who seemed to fear death, except when it was or seemed to be rather far away. Even those who are constantly haunted while strong and well with a dread of the end of life forget their fear when that end is at hand.—Scribner's Magazine.

Where Toys Are Made.

The greatest toy producing districts are the Thuringia mountains, sometimes called the Thuringia forests the ancient city of Nuremberg, in Bavaria, and the region of the Erzgeberg mountains. The most interesting of these localities is the Thuringia mountain district. Situated in upper Saxony, its time and industry are entirely given up to the production of playthings in papier mache, china, glass, wool, wood and fur.—Baltimore Herald.

CHRISTMAS CHEER.

At Christmas play and make good cheer,
For Christmas comes but once a year.
—Tusser.

Be merry all, be merry all!
With holly dress the festive hall;
Prepare the song, the feast, the ball
To welcome merry Christmas.
—W. R. Spencer.

It is the Christmas time:
And up and down 'twixt heaven and earth,
In the glorious grief and solemn mirth,
The shining angels climb.
—D. M. Mulock.

The time draws near the birth of Christ:
The moon is hid; the night is still;
The Christmas bells from hill to hill
Answer each other in the mist.
—Tennyson.

Heap on more wood! the wind is dull,
But let it whistle as it will We'll keep one Christmas merry still.
—Sir Walter Scott.

This is the time when the very old man
Leaps back to the days of youth,
When brows and eyes wear no disguise,
But flush and gleam with truth.
Oh, then is the time when the soul exults
And seems right heavenward turning;
When we love and bless the hand we press,
When the Christmas log is burning!
—Cook.

We speak of a merry Christmas
And many a happy New Year,
But each in his heart is thinking
Of those that are not here.
—Longfellow.

They who do their souls no wrong,
But keep at eve the faith of morn,
Shall daily hear the angel song,
"Today the Prince of Peace is born!"

DON'TS FOR CHRISTMAS.

Seasonable Suggestions—Some Are Strictly Original and Some Are Stolen.

Don't pay more for the Christmas tree than you do for the fruit. This is for everybody.

Don't expect too much in the way of Christmas gifts. You may have to put your foot in your stocking before you find anything in it. This is for those of sanguine temperament.

Don't buy presents until after you pay your debts. Give your creditors a chance to celebrate a merry Christmas before you perform that duty for any one else. This is for whomsoever the coat fits.

Don't give your boy a drum and then tell him he mustn't make a noise with it. Don't give your daughter a horse and forbid her to take it out of the stable without asking you. This is for parents who have enough money to afford drums and horses for Christmas gifts.

Don't be everlastingly harping on what you wish to have for a Christmas gift. Possibly all your friends will take the hint and then you'll have a surplus and have to start a store to reduce it. This is for a large family.

Don't think that the spirit of good will, the impulses of generosity and the jolly laugh of good fellowship are the things that are less necessary to your being truly happy all the year round than they are on Christmas Day. By bearing this in mind you may be able to enjoy 1906 as you have enjoyed no other year. Like the first "don't," this is for everybody.

Christmas Selections.

Christ's cradle was as wonderful as his cross. Persuade me of the first and I am not surprised at the last. The door by which he entered was as tremendous as the door by which he went out. He had only two friends—they, his parents. No satin sheet cradle, no delicate attentions, but straw, and the cattle, and the coarse jokes and banter of the coarse drivers. From this depths of that poverty he rose until today he is honored throughout all Christendom and sits triumphant on the imperial throne in heaven.—Dr. Talmage.

There is Christmas east and Christmas west, Christmas north and Christmas south, but whether amid the snow or the roses is in the same dear festival. I have spent Christmas in St. Augustine and San Diego in Boston and Chicago, and Santa Claus was the same jolly old gentleman in all four places.—Unidentified Philosopher.

Not all are able to give golden gifts, or gifts bought with gold. But when is so good that on Christmas day he may not be able to find a word on some one's behalf or show himself? Who is so downcast that he will not find a token of sympathy of some poor mortal in distress, a smile of friendly recognition to some forlorn one? Even a cup of cold water given in the name of one who founded Christmas shall not lose its reward.—Christmas Chimes.

WHO ARE IN

The Dispatches

IN view of the crusade against alleged grafters in public office, especial interest attaches to the case of United States Senator John Ralph Burton of Kansas. He is charged with using his influence as a senator in behalf of the Rialto Grain and Securities company of St. Louis. It is alleged that he intervened in an improper manner to prevent proceedings being brought against the company by the postoffice department. He was tried and convicted on the charge, then procured a new trial and was again convicted.

There is an unwritten rule of the senate that a member indicted for malfeasance in office must not vote with his colleagues until his innocence is established. When the question of admitting New Mexico to statehood was up for consideration last winter Burton was in the Republican cloakroom, willing and anxious to vote against the admission of the present territory. He stood there waiting for the word. Sturdy Republican leaders like the late Senator Platt of Connecticut and Senator Allison of Iowa knew that with Burton's vote to be had for the asking they could win. No power on earth could prevent Burton from walking into the senate chamber and voting if he had the nerve to brave the displeasure of the senate.

SENATOR J. R. BURTON.

They wanted the vote, but here was a senator under indictment who had been told to stay away from the senate chamber until his case was decided. It was agreed that the dignity of the senate must be upheld, that a senator under indictment could not vote until he was cleared, and the leaders who were against New Mexico saw the bill to admit that territory passed, although the vote that would have beaten the project was within call. However, disagreement between senate and house resulted after all in defeating the plan to make a new state.

Senator Thomas C. Platt, who testified regarding campaign contributions from insurance companies before the Armstrong committee and is engaged in an effort to reorganize his party in New York, appeared very infirm when he took the stand in the insurance investigation. When he had concluded his testimony he was assisted from the room by four men, and on leaving it sank wearily into a small chair. This was then lifted by the men, who in this way conveyed him to his carriage.

SENATOR T. C. PLATT.

Senator Platt has a sense of humor that has often helped him out of perplexing situations. In the closed door caucus he has been appealed to by all kinds of persons for all kinds of favors.

One application received a letter regarding a young army officer who had been denied promotion because of some defect in his eyesight. His mother wrote to Senator Platt, asking for his assistance, closing her letter with the words, "I leave it all to you and the Lord." The senator forwarded this in his own note: "I have noticed that the Lord I am held responsible in case of failure. Therefore I beg that you will assist me."

Representative William Peters Hepburn of Iowa is a veteran in the civil war and a veteran in politics. He will shortly begin his tenth term in congress, was born in Wellsville, O., in 1833 and was first elected to public office in 1856. He participated in the convention which nominated Abraham Lincoln in 1860, and he made a gallant record on the Union side in the war which began soon after Lincoln's inauguration. In the last congress Mr. Hepburn, who was chairman of the committee on interstate and foreign commerce, introduced a bill in regard to regulation of railroad rates which was much criticised on the ground that it was inadequate to effect the objects desired. He was a member of the congressional party that recently visited the Philippines. At a banquet in Tokyo, Japan, he responded to the toast "Views of the American Congress on the Philippine Question," in the course of which he remarked that the congress was made up of "356 human beings and 90 senators," consequently no one could foretell what their views would be.

WILLIAM PETERS HEPBURN.

Colonel Pete, as the congressman is sometimes called, was once defending the logic of a colleague, which seemed, to him, he declared, "out of joint." "This surgeon said he would have to saw a man's leg off," he explained, "because it was out of joint. When the surgeon had sawed off the leg, he found that the joint was in the thigh."

"In the Higgins case, sir, there appears to have been some mistake," said the surgeon.

"'Yes,' the other insisted. 'You cut off Higgins' wrong leg, sir.'

"'Oh, well, that is of no consequence,' said the surgeon. 'We can cure the other one, so it comes to the same thing in the end!'"

Rear Admiral Francis M. Ramsay, retired, the presiding officer in the court martial of Midshipman Meriwether of the Annapolis Naval academy, served on the famous Sampson-Schley court of inquiry. He knows something about such affairs as that in which Midshipman Branch lost his life, as he was once superintendent of the Annapolis academy. The admiral was born near Washington in 1835 and entered the navy in 1850. He won distinction in the civil war and commanded the Choctaw at Haines' bluff in the engagement in which that ironclad was struck over fifty times. Rear Admiral Ramsay succeeded Rear Admiral Sampson as superintendent of the Naval academy, and it was during his administration that an investigation was ordered by congress in respect to a report that a cadet named Strang had been killed by hazing. It was said that his tormentors rolled him downhill in a barrel which had spikes driven through its sides. It was proved that the cadet did not die from such a cause and that he had never been hazed. It was also during his administration that a rebellion among the cadets occurred. The insubordinate students were members of the first, or highest, class, and their action rendered them liable to dismissal. They were confined on the prison ship Santee and deprived of all privileges until the rebellion was quelled. A curious feature of it was their allegation that they had rebelled because Rear Admiral Ramsay had ordered all their heads shorn in order to get hair for the mortar used in building a new residence for the superintendent, but this was not the real reason for their action.

REAR ADMIRAL F. M. RAMSAY.

Poultney Bigelow, who has recently published the fourth volume of his history of "The German Struggle For Liberty," has recently been in Munich investigating the famous Munich weekly Simplicissimus. This paper, edited by Thoma, the popular author, dramatist, poet and satirist, makes it its special business to point out to the emperor how he is regarded by his people. It hates war, ridicules the army's code of honor and the dueling fads of the students and advocates popular liberty all this with much brilliancy and freshness. Naturally it is forbidden by the police at Prussian railway station bookstalls, but the moment the train crosses the border into the next state all the passengers clamor for copies. Every page is submitted to expert legal talent in order to see how far it is safe to go and avoid arrest, but occasionally Thoma goes to jail for the crime of leze majesty. Mr. Bigelow is especially interested in Simplicissimus, as he believes the kaiser to be one of the most maligned men in Europe. His intimate knowledge of the kaiser's real self dates back to the days of the Franco-Prussian war, when he was living with his tutor at Potsdam, and by reason of his father's personal relations with the late Emperor Frederick was often invited to spend his holidays with the present emperor.

POULTNEY BIGELOW.

He has never since been on terms of intimacy with the kaiser. At one time thoughtless people charged him concerning this comradeship until he became tired and irritable at remarks of the kind. It culminated at a dinner in a New York club, where one of the guests told a story of personality. In the pause which followed Mr. Bigelow remarked:

"You remind me of"—

"Not the Emperor William," interrupted the facetious story teller.

"Oh, no!" replied Mr. Bigelow quietly. "The kaiser is a gentleman."

Octave Thanet was once described as "the only female writer in America who is a humorist." In private life she is Miss Alice French, and she lives at Davenport, Ia. President Roosevelt is quite an admirer of her work. A Davenport citizen, Colonel Nuttling, recently journeyed to Washington to attend a convention of business men. Just before he went with other delegates to the White House to meet the president he told several of his fellows that he was going to test the latter's wonted ability of Mr. Roosevelt to remember every one whom he had ever met. He had had two meetings with the president, the last being two years ago.

OCTAVE THANET.

At the reception he reached the president, who, as he grasped the visitor's hand, exclaimed:

"Why, Colonel! Glad to see you. How are all my old friends out in Davenport? And specially how is Mrs. Nuttling? You tell her I said we must have a visit. Do you know, that woman knows as much about factories and the [illegible] business as a man."

POET AND HUMORIST.

Career of Tom Masson, Author of "A Corner In Women."

Tom Masson, whose new book, "A Corner In Women, and Other Follies," is one of the entertaining books of the year, is the managing editor of Life. He is a native of Connecticut, is nearly forty years of age and has been writing humorous, satirical and philosophical verse and prose for at least two decades. His father was a sea captain, and the first ten years of his life were spent at sea. Then he undertook to be a business man and displayed much aptitude for such a career, but love of literary work lured him to try his hand at authorship. He compromised somewhat by developing into one of the most systematic, hardworking and businesslike literary men in America. He does everything by the watch—works so many hours a day, whether he feels inspired or not, and in this respect somewhat resembles the late Anthony Trollope, who enjoyed telling a story about a shoemaker he knew. This man when he went to work invariably placed a bit of shoemaker's wax on his bench and sat down on it. Every time he felt inclined to cease pegging away and started to get up the wax held him down, thus reminding him that industry was what was needed in this world. "And genius," said Trollope, "is only another name for shoemaker's wax."

Mr. Masson resides in Glen Ridge, N. J., is a member of the board of education, has a wife and three children and has run an automobile for a year or two without breaking his neck.. in "A Corner In Women" a great trust magnate named Morgfeller kidnaps all the women in New York, and the resulting complications are very amusing.

MENZ AND HIS DEVIL.

Detroit Man and Image He Set Up In His Yard.

A few centuries ago Herman Menz, who has erected a statue of Satan in his front yard in Detroit, would have been burned at the stake. By making a martyr of the old gentleman who can find nothing better to worship than his Satanic majesty the authorities would have raised him to an importance he is not now likely to receive. His statue of the devil has been treated for the most part as a harmless sculptural freak, though when it was first unveiled and was seen to be draped in American flags the indignation aroused by such a use of the emblem of civic liberty was such that the old man decided to remove the flags and leave only a ribbon of red, white and blue around Old Nick's neck. The church people of Detroit agreed that Menz and his devil would prove but a nine days' wonder and that the incident was not worth treating seriously. The small boys of the vicinity, however, soon discovered that Satan made an excellent target for stones and other missiles and to protect it from injury or destruction the police had to guard it.

HERMAN MENZ'S STATUE OF THE DEVIL.

Menz is an infidel and comes of a family of infidels. He was born in Germany, has lived in this country for over a score of years and is a stonemason. He built with his own hands the house in which he and his family live and adorned it with queer heads. A CHRISTMAS EVE VISION.

Weird, ghostly shadows dance upon the wall,
The dying embers flicker in the grate,
From out the darkness voices seem to call,
And a lone star gleams like the eye of fate.

Can nature sympathize with human pain
And the wind moan because poor mortals mourn?
If so, no wonder that its low refrain
Is sad tonight, as if of misery born.

Sigh, O west wind, as if through all the years
That man knew sorrow thou hadst ceaseless swept Across the graves bedewed by human tears,
Freighted with all the woes of those who wept!

The past is drowsy on my brain, and I Am now where solitude has found a voice,
While on my ear falls, soft as lover's sigh,
The words of her, my first, my only choice.

I feel the pressure of her hand in mine,
The soothing touch of other on my brow;
Hear, soft as south wind sighing through the pine,
The words of love, not sweeter then than now.

O maiden fair, thou of the blue eyes bright,
Where love enshrined itself in depths profound,
Twine sprig of holly in thy hair tonight,
Thou long lost loved one, lost to me, now found!

Mutely thou dar'st me take at midnight chime
Beneath the mistletoe love's first, pure kiss,
Which verged my being to a point in time,
And conscious life was naught but conscious bliss.

Oh, fangy that didst cheat me for an hour,
No more canst thou such magic o'er me cast
Or lonely room become an Eden's bower
By thy adivid pictures of the past!

I am again alone. That vision bright
Of youth's brief, happy days has passed away,
And like sun glinted clouds as fades the light
The glamour's ended in a cheerless gray.

I hear the sobbing winds again intone,
The dying embers flicker in the grate,
The twinkling star looms from afar alone,
While I, a prey to sadness, bide my fate.

"WONDERFUL" IS THE WORD.

How and Why Cal-cura Solvent, Cures Rheumatism, Blood and Urinary Diseases.

It is a wonderful discovery, this new medicine, that swiftly removes Stone, Red and White Gravel, from the Kidneys and Bladder, avoiding the intense suffering produced by these foreign bodies, and often rendering a dangerous surgical operation unnecessary. Cal-cura Solvent does this. The greatest work of Cal-cura Solvent, is that it prevents the formation of stone and gravel by dissolving uric acid and phosphatic sediments, thus purifying the blood and correcting all those uric acid conditions of the stomach which are responsible for the formation of uric acid or gout poisoning and rheumatism. Dr. David Kennedy said: "I consider Cal-cura Solvent the crowning achievement of my life. It will not disappoint."

Vultures and a Dead Tiger.

The vulture is seen at its best when a dead tiger, brought into camp to be skinned, is exposed in the open. Overhead is a cloudless sky, and not a bird to be seen in that great void by the human eye. The tiger's body is thrown from the pad to the ground, and before the skin has been removed there above one and always nearing the earth are the vultures circling, poising like things of air, now a dozen of them, in a few minutes a score or two and then a hundred strong. Then, when the flayed carcass of the tiger is left by those who skinned it, the vultures descend. Down they come like feathered thunder out of the sky, and from east and west and north and south, the very embodiment of power while they whirled aloft and in their quick descent to earth, and now, as they waddle around that carrion beast, misshapen ghouls, whose only apparent strength is that of the ravening jaws which tear and gorge the tiger's flesh, until within the hour naught of that splendid brute remains but a clean picked skeleton.—Sir Edward Braddon's "Thirty Years of Shikar."

Grip Quickly Knocked Out.

"Some weeks ago during the severe winter weather both my wife and myself contracted severe colds which speedily developed into the worst kind of la gripps with all its miserable symptoms," says Mr. J. S. Eggleston of Maple Landing, Iowa. "K ees and joints aching, muscles sore, head stopped up, eyes and nose running, with alternate spells of chills and fever. We began using Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, aiding the same with a dose of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets, and by its liberal use soon completely knocked out the grip."

It is a good plan to take a dose of the Tablets when you have a cold. They promote a healthy action of the bowels, liver and kidneys which is always beneficial when the system is congested by a cold or attack of the grip. For sale by H. C Gie ler.

Conceit.

Conceit is essential to rapid advancement—not overconceit, but conceit in reasonable volume. The conceit of youth becomes the assurance of old age. If you're master of your conceit, you have back of you a slave of unlimited assistance. If conceit is your master, you're doomed to failure. But don't cultivate self conceit. It's a lusty plant. Give it half a chance and it will outgrow your self respect.—N. C. Fowler, Jr., in "Gumption."

Give Your Stomach Rest.

Nothing will cure indigestion that doesn't digest the food, itself, and give the stomach rest. You can't expect that a weak stomach will regain its strength and get well when it is compelled to do the full work that a sound stomach should do. You wouldn't expect a sick horse to get well when it is compelled to do a full day's work every day of the week. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure is a perfect digestant and digests the food regardless of the condition of your stomach disorders. J. O. Sether, traveling salesman, Crookston, Minn., says: "I have used Kodol Dyspepsia Cure for a period of nine months, and am cured of Dyspepsia." Sold by H. C. Giesler and G. T. Boyington.

A Suggestive Sermon.

The Rev. Dr. Howard, chaplain to Princess Augusta, was so fond of good living that he ran into debt with many of the tradesmen in his parish. It was in their special interests that he one day preached from the text, "Have patience, and I will pay you all." He spoke at great length on the virtues of patience and then proceeded, "I now come to the second part of my discourse, which is, 'and I will pay you all,' but that I shall defer to a future occasion."—London Standard.

A Bank Pessimist.

A Lady Bountiful living in a suburban village met an old man on the road one day and asked after his family, his health, etc. The old man gave a rather gloomy account of things. He had to work all day and every day, and he was growing old and felt the cold and was always tired. He wished he could rest a bit after his long life of labor. He was weary, very weary.

Lady Bountiful reminded him gently that every one had his share of work to do in this world, and that it was all only a preparation of the world to come, where there will be no tears or labor.

The old man shook his head and smiled cynically.

"That may be for the likes of you," he said. "But there'll be work for the likes of me. It will be the same thing there: 'John, clean the sun.' 'John, hang out the moon.' 'John, light the stars.' 'John, stop the wind.' They will find something for me to do, ma'am—you'll see."

A Wonderful Ride.

The most wonderful straightaway ride ever made by man was the gallop of Francis Xavier Aubrey, ci-devant Canadian voyageur and a famous pony express rider, from Santa Fe, N. M., to Independence, Mo., in 1853—800 miles in five days and thirteen hours. In 1852 he had covered the same distance in a little over eight days, and his record was on the wager of $1,000 that he "could do it in an even eight." In the whole distance he did not stop to rest, and he changed horses only with every 100 or 200 miles. He was a stocky French Canadian, light hearted, genial, adventurous and absolutely fearless. For some time he was an overland freighter, and he also made the enormously difficult and dangerous drive of a flock of sheep from New Mexico to California across the deserts of the Colorado. He was killed in Santa Fe.—McClure's Magazine.

When Death Cools His Sting.

There is a curious superstition in Jamaica that if a death occurs in the house all the water in it is poisoned at once and must be thrown away, the reason given being that "death" cools his "sting" after destroying life in the first water he finds, and as no one can tell—death being invisible—what jar he may choose it is safest to throw it all away. Careful people to save trouble even carry all water out of the house immediately before a death is expected.

Telegraph Operators' Signs.

Telegraph operators always have personal signs which they place on all messages they send or receive. Usually they use two of their initials or take two letters from their names. For instance, James Black will probably use "JB" as his sign. In many cases, however, they choose their signs in peculiar ways.

"We once had a man working here who signed 'KE' because he had taken the Keeley cure," said a Kansas City chief operator. "He afterward went back to drinking and then used 'BZ,' deriving it from 'booze.' Another fellow signed 'FS' because he used to say he received a poor salary. A woman operator we had here used to sign 'HK,' her initials, until one day her beau jilted her and married another girl. After that she signed 'BH,' which, we understood, meant 'broken heart.' In an eastern office where I once worked there was a hoodoo sign. It was 'KQ.' The first man who used it there was killed by a train, the next one went crazy and the third died of typhoid fever. After that nobody in the office dared use the hoodoo sign. The story about its being a Jonah traveled over the country, and today you'll find very few operators signing 'KQ.'"

American Exuberance.

A prominent English statesman who visited this country a few years ago was talking with friends about the national characteristics of Americans and gave it as his opinion that the westerner is the most truly humorous of the citizens of the United States.

"Why," said the Briton in explanation, "a relative of mine who frequently visits the States for purposes of sport tells me that he was entranced by the reply made to him by the proprietor of a hotel in Nebraska when he asked if there were any quail in the vicinity.

"'Quail!' exclaimed the proprietor. 'I should say so! Why, they've got to be a regular nuisance round here. My cook complains that she can't throw a piece of toast out of the window without four or five fat quail fighting to see which shall get on it!'"—Woman's Home Companion.

The Antiquity of Football.

If it is not the oldest game in the world football is not far from it. But it has never been a game in which puny nations played. The Greek game was originally called phenida, or feinting, later it was called episkyrus, epikoinos, and lastly harpaston, under which name it came to resemble football. The Roman game was follis and was less rough. There was a center runner in harpaston, around whom the game was fought out. One side was given the ball; the other side chose a center. The side with the ball stood some distance back from a line on which the center runner was posted, and at signal the ball was thrown past the middle man. Players could be held back from securing the ball in any way, though the Greek youths had no rush formation, never seeming to have learned the value of team work.—Outing.

The Work Ahead FOR THE Coming Congress

THE opening of congress gives the country a new topic of discussion, and signs are not lacking that the coming session will be in many respects a lively one. Although the Republicans have a large majority in both branches of congress, there is a prospect that matters will come up for consideration upon which the members of the majority party are not wholly agreed, so that there will be a chance for the development of new factional alignments and unprecedented political situations. New issues have recently come to the front in respect to which party lines have not been strictly drawn. Among the topics which will be uppermost in debate will be railroad rate legislation, the work of constructing the Panama canal, federal supervision of insurance companies, tariff revision, limitation of representation from southern states on account of alleged suppression of the colored vote, admission of new states and matters connected with the insular possessions of the United States. The leading place will be taken by the subject of railroad rate legislation. The house of representatives passed a bill on this subject last winter, but the senate adjourned without taking action on it. This being a new congress, the matter must be taken up again from the beginning, and it is the plan of the advocates of railroad rate legislation in the house to pass a new bill on the same lines as that of the last session, but somewhat more explicit. They hope to get this bill through early in the season and thus give the senate no excuse for inaction on the ground of insufficient time to consider the matter.

The Fifty-ninth congress is composed largely of old members—old, that is to say, in the sense of having already seen congressional service. There are 386 men in the house of representatives, and 290 of these, or 75 per cent, have occupied seats in the chamber before. The percentage in the last congress was 60. Fifteen states are represented in the Fifty-ninth congress by the same men who represented them in the Fifty-eighth congress. Among the new men in the senate are James A. Hemenway of Indiana, Frank B. Brandegee of Connecticut and Robert Marion La Follette of Wisconsin. Mr. Hemenway took the seat vacated by Senator Fairbanks when he became vice president. The new member from Indiana is regarded as one of the ablest legislators at Washington and has the advantage of a long and busy service in the house of representatives to aid him in becoming a leading figure among the senators. Senator Brandegee, who succeeds the late Senator Orville H. Platt, has also served in the house. He has the distinction of being the youngest member of the new senate, and, as he has quite a reputation as an orator, is expected to become a figure on the floor of the senate chamber. Another new senator from New England is W. Murray Crane.

Speaker Cannon is likely to be the same dominant figure in the house of representatives of the Fifty-ninth congress that he was in the Fifty-eighth. Though he prefers to be considered an "easy boss," his rule over the house is none the less firm. He often carries his points without creating any ill feeling because of his love of humor and command of wit and homely illustrations. One of the questions on which Speaker Cannon differs from some of his Republican colleagues is that of the tariff. He does not believe in revision. "I am not in favor of hanging the country up by the tail," was the way he put it in referring to the subject recently. Asked to explain his ideas on this head more fully he described the disturbances to industry which he thought would follow any efforts in the direction of tariff revision and added: "We used to swing dogs by the tail when we were boys. It must have been a very uncomfortable sensation for the dog. It would be just as uncomfortable a sensation for this great country, and, by Jove, I am not one to sit quietly by and see it attempted!"

A new member of the house who at the same time is an old member is General J. Warren Keifer, once speaker, who, after years of absence, has been returned to congress from Ohio.

Acute Sense of Hearing.

"Yes," said the prosperous lawyer in speaking to a friend, "I had a long wait before I got any practice, but I am certainly satisfied now with my profession and its emoluments.

"The early days, the waiting for clients, was hard, though. Why, do you know that I got so after awhile that when I heard a footstep on the stairs I could tell ninety-nine times out of a hundred whether or not the person was coming to my office?"

"Well, that is strange," replied his friend. "Your sense of hearing must have been very acute."

"Not so much that," replied the lawyer. "You see, I made up my mind that they were not coming to my office and ninety-nine times out of a hundr I was right."

Early Autograph Hunters.

A certain Atossa in early Roman days seems to have been the mother of autograph collectors. Cicero had a collection, which must have been a fine one, for he speaks of it with particular pride. The fever, even in those far back days, was contagious. Pliny speaks of Pompeius Secundus, at whose house he had seen autographs of Cicero, Augustus, Virgil and the Gracchi, and his own collection was valued at $15,000 of our money. Then came the hurrah of barbarians, and we do not again meet with the collector until the beginning of the sixteenth century, when he reappears in the person of a Bohemian squire, who kept a book to record his exploits in the chase, and enriched it with the signatures of his great hunter friends.

CHRISTMAS IN CAMP.

HON. AMOS J. CUMMINGS RELATES AN AMUSING EXPERIENCE.

How He Added a Pot of Soup, a Little Sugar, Some Molasses and a Canteen of Yeast to the Christmas Mess—On Short Rations.

My recollections of Christmas experiences in the army are mostly connected with the matter of grub, and I suppose every other old soldier, if he is frank enough, will admit the same thing. As a rule we always looked for boxes from home on Christmas day, and those boxes were tolerably certain to have something in them that made a delightful change from the ordinary rations. When we got those boxes, we celebrated Christmas. When we didn't, we didn't celebrate. Christmas was pretty much the same as any other day under those circumstances.

The particular Christmas that stands up above all others in my memory was that of 1862. We had gone into camp after Fredericksburg, at a place called White Oak church, about six miles from Falmouth, Va., and lay there when Christmas came. We looked for our boxes, of course, for we knew the people at home would not forget us, but no boxes came. We learned afterward that they were only three or four miles away, but that didn't help us then, and we didn't get them for several days.

It was bitter cold. Only two days after Christmas three or four men were frozen to death on picket, and it was almost as cold then, but even worse than the weather was the notion of feeding on hard tack and salt horse, which was about all we had, while the people at home had turkey and plum pudding. In the morning, though, there seemed to be no help for it, and while we didn't grin we thought we had to bear it.

At noon, however, there came a little alleviation. One of the men—I remember his name was Hageman—came in from picket duty with the bones of a sheep that he had kicked up in the snow. Some guerrillas had been along there and had killed and eaten the poor brute and left the bones. They had mighty little meat on them, but they were full of marrow, and we boiled them up. There was a Dutch sergeant in the company who had a potato, and somebody managed to steal two onions from the quartermaster; so we had some soup.

It was a change, and so it was welcome. I don't remember to have enjoyed any soup since then quite as much as I did that, but somehow it didn't seem to fill the bill of fare very well for Christmas, and we were ready to take almost any kind of a chance for something good.

My brother was in the same company with me, and he was on guard at brigade headquarters that day. We all knew that there were some provisions in the storehouse there, but the question was how to get at them. It meant running the risk of being shot by some sentinel, besides the certainty of severe punishment in case we should get caught trying to steal anything, yet there were some of us willing to take the chance.

When my brother came in after being relieved, he came to my tent in great glee.

"I've got it!" he said after making sure nobody was looking or listening.

"What have you got?" I asked. "Sugar," he explained. "Where is it?" said I.

"Here," said he, showing me his musket. "I managed to get into the storehouse long enough to pick the barrel of his gun full of sugar, but didn't get anything else.

"That is good," said I, "but if there are [illegible] storehouse there ought to be some whisky there too." And I made up my mind to get some of that whisky that night if it was a possible thing.

There was a corporal named Nason in the company, who was always ready to take chances if there was anything to be gained by it, and he wanted some of that whisky as much as I did. It was cold enough to make a temperance orator long for a nip. I hunted Nason up, and we agreed to start together when it got dark enough. Meantime we managed to steal an auger from the quartermaster, and that, with two canteens, made all the outfit we thought we needed.

Fortunately it was a dark night, and we knew the lay of the land all right, so we had a comparatively easy time to dodge the sentries. It wasn't really easy, but it proved to be a good deal easier than getting away from the place afterward. It took us half an hour of hiding and dodging to get through the line, but we managed it and found ourselves, somewhere about 10 o'clock, under the storehouse.

It was a rough sort of a shanty, built on the side of a hill, and there was room enough to move around under it all right, but the trouble was, we had neither of us been inside the building and we hadn't any notion where the things were packed, so we could only guess where the whisky barrel was, and that was what we were after.

We took turns boring holes in the floor at random, and it wasn't long before we found out that we had a pretty dirty job on hand, to say nothing of a good bit of hard work, but we persevered for something like an hour before we could strike anything that would leak through. We struck all sorts of things that wouldn't leak, but we had no means of knowing what they were and no way of getting them down if we had known.

At length, after an hour, we struck a barrel out of which a slow thick stream began to trickle. We couldn't think what it was till we tasted it, and then we knew it was molasses. We used a little language for a minute or two, but even molasses was a treat, and we couldn't afford to despise it. So we filled one canteen with that and plugged the hole up as well as we could, so as not to waste the stuff unnecessarily. I am afraid the plug wasn't a very good one, but we did the best we could.

Then we went to work again. It was a little discouraging, but we didn't propose to give up. We bored hole after hole. It seems to me we must have bored 50 or more before we got through, and it took some minutes for each one. Sometimes we would go through the floor and hit nothing, and sometimes, as I said, it would be something solid.

At last we struck something that spouted like a geyser, only it spouted downward. I was right under it and I was flooded in a minute. I scrambled out of the way as quickly as possible, and we investigated. It was yeast. Well, yeast didn't seem to be as near what we wanted as the molasses was, but we didn't propose to lose any tricks, so we filled the other canteen with that, after we had had a good drink apiece. It was not quite equal to the best beer, but it was a sort of substitute for it, and we enjoyed it hugely.

We didn't succeed in plugging that up as well as we did the molasses barrel, though we did try. The yeast was too much for us, and I am seriously afraid that that whole barrel of yeast was spilled.

By this time we had pretty well despaired of finding the whisky, but we kept on trying awhile longer, until it seemed as if we had riddled the floor so completely that there was no place left above where a barrel could stand. Finally we gave it up and began to plan a retreat.

The side of the hill in the rear of the house was covered with a sort of ice formation that was 300 or 400 feet wide and sloped downward at a pretty steep angle. We had surveyed this carefully before going in, and I said to Nason that if we could make a rush over to where that ice was we could get down the hill a good deal faster than any of the sentinels would care to come after us, for all we had to do was to jump on the ice and slide down. That seemed to be about the best scheme we could think of, so we watched our chance and made a rush.

We hadn't got to the edge of the hill, and that was only a few feet from the storehouse, when we heard the sentries cry, "Who goes there?" It really wasn't worth while for us to stop and answer them under the circumstances, so we kept right on. There were two or three shots fired after us, but we did not get hit. I don't imagine the men on guard were very anxious to kill us, for they must have understood in an instant what we were about and probably stopped long enough to remember that they would have liked the chance to try the same thing.

So our Christmas extras that year were a pot of soup, a little sugar, a little molasses and a canteen of yeast. And I think perhaps we enjoyed the yeast more than any of the other things. The real Christmas festival did not come for some days afterward, when our boxes arrived, and I remember that I had a glorious time, for there was a big Yorkshire plum pudding in my box and three pounds of killikinick tobacco, and the tobacco was a perfect godsend.

But before that, on the morning after Christmas day, there was the very mischief to pay in camp, and if Nason and I had been found out, we would have been in for severe punishment, for we had done a great amount more of mischief than we knew anything about.

It appeared that there was a politician of some standing—I think he was an alderman from Boston or somewhere—who had been in camp for some days looking for the remains of his brother, who had been killed some time before, and he had found them Christmas morning. The body had been disinterred and put in a handsome coffin that the alderman had brought from home, and the coffin had been put in the storehouse over night.

Of course we didn't know it was there. Perhaps it might have made a difference to Nason and me if we had known. I don't know as I care about expressing an opinion on such a delicate question. At all events we didn't know, and naturally we couldn't be expected to bore holes through the floor in as many places as we did here them without hitting the coffin, and as a matter of fact we had bored three or four holes in it. It hadn't really spoiled the [illegible] for actual service, but it had certainly damaged it to some extent.

Well the politician made a row, and the commanding officer ordered a general search of the camp, to see if any trace could be found of the miscreants—meaning Nason and me—who had been guilty of the desecration. It was a prett, rigorous search, too, and our tents were ransacked thoroughly, but long before they got around to our quarters Nason and I had the molasses and sugar, or what was left of them, safely buried. Of course the yeast was all gone, and there wasn't a trace of our crimes left.

I WAS FLOODED IN A MINUTE.

I suppose it would be easy to tell a more sentimental story about a soldier's Christmas, but the sentiment that moved us most powerfully when we were on short rations in those days was hunger.

AMOS J. CUMMINGS.

Cleaning Men's Clothes.

A tailor of fifty years' experience gives the following information:

All men's clothing to be cleaned should be thoroughly beaten and brushed. Some things are so dirty it is absolutely necessary to wash them as any other woolen goods. Iron on the wrong side. To remove spots, use the following:

Two ounces of hartshorn, an ounce of castile soap, a quarter of an ounce of saltpeter. Dissolve in a quart of rain water.

He has used many cleaning mixtures, but considers this the best. Put a wad of soft cloth (like an old towel) under the spot, saturate well and rub hard. The secret of success lies in hard rubbing, which will drive the grease through into the wad of cloth. Rub dark goods with dark woolen and light goods with light. Press on right side with damp cloth between iron and garment.—Buffalo News.

SIR FREDERICK TREVES.

Famous Surgeon Who Says Disease Is Not a Bad Thing.

Americans heard a good deal about the famous English surgeon, Sir Frederick Treves, when he operated so successfully upon King Edward and brought that monarch through an illness which threatened to put a premature end to his reign. He stands at the head of his profession in England and holds the title of sergeant surgeon in ordinary to the king and surgeon in ordinary to the Prince of Wales. He is a foremost authority on the subject of appendicitis and peritonitis and was the first surgeon to introduce removal of the vermiform appendix as a cure for appendicitis, which, by the way, he calls "perityphlitis." It is said that he has operated upon more than a thousand cases of this nature and that only two persons of all this number died.

Recently Sir Frederick has been attracting attention by his utterances to the effect that disease is not altogether a bad thing. Disease, he says, may be beneficent, and he declares that if it were not for disease the human race would soon be extinct. In illustration of his idea he instances the malady known as a cold, and says that sneezing drives bacteria from the nasal passages, while coughing removes them from the windpipe.

Sir Frederick was born in 1853, educated in London and won his reputation in London hospitals. At the outbreak of the South African war he threw up his London practice and volunteered for service. He was appointed consulting surgeon, was present at every engagement from Colenso to Ladysmith and on his return was knighted. It is related that when he got back in London he met one day an officer who had been wounded and the greater part of whose brain the surgeon had removed. On the surgeon asking him how he was getting along with half a brain the officer answered: "Oh, it's all right, you know. They have given me a good berth in the war office."

Adorning the Christmas Tree.

The foliage of a Christmas tree may be brushed here and there with mucilage and then sprinkled with common salt and a very pleasing result is obtained. A pretty drapery for the tree is made by cutting long strips, about four inches wide, of tissue paper, then cutting it closely, partly, but not entirely, across the widths, making fringes. If the strips be dampened and held over a hot stove, the fringed edges will curl and look quite ornamental.—Omaha Bee.

A Certain Cure for Croup.

When a child shows symptoms of croup there is no time to experiment with new remedies, no matter how highly they may be recommended. There is one preparation that can always be depended upon. It has been in use for many years and has never been known to fail, viz: Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Give it a trial and a quick cure is sure to follow. Mr. M. F. Compton of Market, Texas, says of it, "I have used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in several cases of croup with my children, and can truthfully say it always gives prompt relief." For sale by H. C.
